[F., < L. inductio(n-), in, in, + duco, lead.]

Syn.: deduction, inference. Deduction is reasoning from the general to the particular; induction is reasoning from the particular to the general. Deduction proceeds from a general principle through an admitted instance to a conclusion. Induction proceeds from a number of collated instances, through some attribute common to them all, to a general principle. In deduction, if the general rule is true, and the special case falls under the rule, the conclusion is in-dus'tri-ous, 1 in-dus'tri-us; 2 ĭn-dŭs'tri-ŭs, a. 1. Assiduously or habitually occupied in any work, business, or pursuit. 2. Indicating diligence.

Syn.: active, assiduous, busy, diligent, employed, engaged, occupied, sedulous. Industrious signifies zealously or habitually applying oneself to any work or business. Busy applies to an activity which may be temporary, industrious to a habit of life. We say a man is busy just now; that is, occupied at the moment with something that takes his full attention. It would be ridiculous or satirical to say, he is industrious just now. But busy can be used in the sense of industrious, as when we say he is a busy man. Diligent indicates also a disposition, which is ordinarily habitual, and suggests more of heartiness and volition than industrious. We say one is a diligent, rather than an industrious, reader of the Bible. In the use of the nouns, we speak of plodding industry, but not of plodding diligence. Compare ACTIVE; BUSY; INDEFATIGABLE; INDUSTRY.—in-dus'tri-ous-ly, adv.

in'dus-try, 1 in'dus-tri; 2 ĭn'dŭs-ty, n. [-TRIES[z], pl.] 1. Earnest or constant application to work or business. 2. Useful labor in general. 3. A special branch of productive work, or the capital or workers employed in it. [< L. industria, < industrius, diligent.]

Syn.: application, assiduity, attention, constancy, diligence, effort, exertion, intentness, labor, pains, patience, perseverance, persistence, sedulousness. Industry is the quality, action, or habit of earnest, steady, and continued attention or devotion to any useful or productive work or task, manual or mental. Assiduity (L. ad, to, and sedeo, sit), as the etymology suggests, sits down to a task until it is done. Diligence (L. diligo, love, choose) invests more effort and exertion, with love of the work or deep interest in its accomplishment; application (L. ad, to, and plico, fold) bends to its work and concentrates all one's powers upon it with utmost intensity; hence, application can hardly be as unremitting as assiduity. Constancy is a steady devotion of heart and principle. Patience works on in spite of annoyances; perseverance overcomes hindrances and difficulties; persistence strives relentlessly against opposition; persistence has very frequently an unfavorable meaning, implying that one persists in spite of considerations that should induce him to desist. Industry is diligence applied to some vocation, business, or profession; hence, by derived use, the occupation itself‡. Labor and pains refer to the exertions of the worker and the tax upon him, while assiduity, perseverance, etc., refer to his continuance in the work. See BUSINESS.—Ant.: changeableness, fickleness, idleness, inattention, inconstancy, indolence, neglect, negligence, remissness, sloth.

Syn.: absolute, boundless, countless, eternal, illimitable, immeasurable, innumerable, interminable, limitless, measureless, numberless, unbounded, unconditioned, unfathomable, unlimited, unmeasured. Infinite (L. in, not, and finis, limit) signifies without bounds or limits in any way, and may be applied to space, time, quantity, or number. Countless, innumerable, and numberless, which should be the same as infinite, are in common usage vaguely employed to denote what it is difficult or practically impossible to count or number, tho perhaps falling far short of infinite; as, countless leaves, the countless sands on the seashore, numberless battles, innumerable delays. So, too, boundless, illimitable, limitless, measureless, and unlimited are loosely used in reference to what has no apparent or readily determinable limit, in space or time; as, we speak of the boundless ocean. Infinite space is without bounds, not only in fact, but in thought; infinite time is truly eternal. Compare ETERNAL; PERFECT. —Ant.: bounded, brief, circumscribed, evanescent, finite, limited, little, measurable, moderate, narrow, restricted, shallow, short, small, transient, transitory.

in'flu-ence, 1 in'flu-ens; 2 ĭn'flu-ĕnç, vt. [-ENCED[t]; -ENCING.] 1. To act upon, affect, or modify physically, especially in some gentle or gradual way. 2. To exert or maintain a mental or moral power upon or over.

Syn.: actuate, affect, command, compel, dispose, draw, drive, excite, impel, incite, incline, induce, instigate, lead, mold, move, persuade, prompt, stir, sway, urge. To influence (L. in, in or into, and fluo, flow) is to affect, modify, or act upon by physical, mental, or moral power, especially in some gentle, subtle, and gradual way; as, vegetation is influenced by light; every one is influenced to some extent by public opinion; influence is chiefly used of power acting from without, tho it may be used of motives regarded as forces acting upon the will. Actuate refers solely to mental or moral power impelling one from within. One may influence, but can not directly actuate another; but one may be actuated to cruelty by hatred which another's misrepresentation has aroused. Prompt and stir are words of mere suggestion toward some course of action; dispose, draw, incline, influence, and lead refer to the use of mild means to awaken in another a purpose or disposition to act. To excite is to arouse one from lethargy or indifference to action. Incite and instigate, to spur or goad one to action, differ in the fact that incite may be to good, while instigate is always to evil (compare ABET). To urge and impel signify to produce strong excitation toward some act. Drive and compel imply irresistible influence accomplishing its object. One may be driven either by his own passions or by external force or urgency; one is compelled only by some external power; as, the owner was compelled by his misfortunes to sell his estate. Compare ACTUATE; BEND; COMPEL; DRIVE; GOVERN; PERSUADE.—Ant.: deter, discourage, dissuade, hinder, impede, inhibit, prevent, restrain, retard.—Prep.: influenced to some action by some cause or motive.

in-her'ent, a. 1. Permanently united; innate; essential. 2. Pertaining as a property or attribute.

Syn.: congenital, essential, immanent, inborn, inbred, indispensable, indwelling, infixed, ingrained, inhering, innate, inseparable, internal, intrinsic, inwrought, native, natural, subjective. Immanent is a philosophic word, to denote that which dwells in or pervades any substance or spirit without necessarily being a part of it, and without reference to any working out (compare SUBJECTIVE). That which is inherent is an inseparable part of that in which it inheres, and is usually thought of with reference to some outworking or effect: as, an inherent difficulty. God is said to be immanent (not inherent) in the universe. Frequently intrinsic and inherent can be interchanged, but inherent applies to qualities, while intrinsic applies to essence, so that to speak of intrinsic excellence conveys higher praise than if we say inherent excellence. Inherent and intrinsic may be said of persons or things; congential, inborn, inbred, innate, apply to living beings. Congential is frequent in medical and legal use with special application to defects; as, congential idiocy. Innate and inborn are almost identical, but innate is preferred in philosophic use, as when we speak of innate ideas; that which is inborn, congential, or innate may be original with the individual, but that which is inbred is inherited. Ingrained signifies dyed in the grain, and denotes that which is deeply wrought into substance or character. See NATURAL.—Ant.: accidental, casual, external, extrinsic, fortuitous, incidental, outward, subsidiary, superadded, superficial, superfluous, superimposed, supplemental, transient, unconnected.

in'ju-ry, n. [-RIES[2], pl.] 1. Any wrong, damage, or mischief done or suffered. 2. A source of harm. 3. A wrong or damage done to another.

Syn.: blemish, damage, detriment, disadvantage, evil, harm, hurt, impairment, injustice, loss, mischief, outrage, prejudice, wrong. Injury is the general term including all the rest. Whatever reduces the value, utility, beauty, or desirableness of anything is an injury to that thing; of persons, whatever is so done as to operate adversely to one in his person, rights, property, or reputation is an injury. Damage (L. damnum, loss) is that which occasions loss to the possessor; hence, any impairment of value, often with the suggestion of fault on the part of the one causing it; damage reduces value, utility, or beauty; detriment (L. deterere, to rub or wear away) is similar in meaning, but far milder. Detriment may affect value only; damage always affects real worth or utility; as a rule, the slightest use of an article by a purchaser operates to its detriment if again offered for sale, tho the article may have received not the slightest damage. Damage is partial; loss is properly absolute as far as it is predicated at all; the loss of a ship implies that it is gone beyond recovery; the loss of the rudder is a damage to the ship; but since the loss of a part still leaves a part, we may speak of a partial or a total loss. Evil commonly suggests suffering or sin, or both; as, the evils of poverty, the social evil. Harm is closely synonymous with injury; it may apply to body, mind, or estate, but always affects real worth, while injury may concern only estimated value. A hurt is an injury that causes pain, physical or mental; a slight hurt may be no real harm. Mischief is disarrangement, trouble, or harm usually caused by some voluntary agent, with or without injurious intent; a child's thoughtless sport may do great mischief; wrong is harm done with evil intent. An outrage combines insult and injury. Compare synonyms for BLEMISH; CRIMINAL; INJUSTICE; LOSS; OUTRAGE; VIOLENCE.—Ant.: advantage, amelioration, benefit, blessing, boon, help, improvement, remedy, service, utility. — Prep.: injury of or to a person or thing; injury by fire; by or from collision, interference, etc.

in-jus'tice, 1 in-jus'tis; 2 ĭn-jŭs'tiç, n. The violation or denial of justice; an unjust act; a wrong.

Syn.: grievance, iniquity, injury, unfairness, unrighteousness, wrong. Injustice is a violation or denial of justice, an act or omission that is contrary to equity or justice; as, the injustice of unequal taxes. In legal usage a wrong involves injury to person, property, or reputation, as the result of evil intent; injustice applies to civil damage or loss, not necessarily involving injury to person or property, as by misrepresentation of goods which does not amount to a legal warranty. In popular usage, injustice may involve no direct injury to person, property, interest, or character, and no harmful intent, while wrong always involves both; one who attributes another's truly generous act to a selfish motive does him an injustice. Iniquity, in the original sense, is a want of or a deviation from equity; but it is now applied in the widest sense to any form of ill-doing. Compare synonyms for CRIMINAL; INJURY; SIN.—Ant.: equity, fairness, fair play, faithfulness, honesty, honor, impartiality, integrity, justice, lawfulness, rectitude, right, righteousness, uprightness.

A little child or a lamb is innocent; a tried and faithful man is righteous, upright, virtuous. Immaculate, pure, and sinless may be used either of one who has never known the possibility of evil or of one who has perfectly and triumphantly resisted it. Innocent is used of inanimate substances in the sense of harmless; as, an innocent remedy, that is, one not dangerous, even if not helpful. Innocent, in a specific case, signifies free from the guilt of a particular act, even tho the total character may be very evil; as, the thief was found to be innocent of the murder. See CANDID; PURE. —Ant.: Compare synonyms for CRIMINAL.

Syn.: ask, examine, interrogate, query, question. To ask is to use some form of speech, short of direct command, for obtaining something from another. Ask has thus two distinct uses: (a) that which is asked may be some benefit, favor, help, relief, etc. Such asking is commonly not in the form of a question: as, "Please help me." (See synonyms for ASK); (b) that which is asked may be information, in which case the words ordinarily take the form of a question; in this latter sense ask is a synonym for inquire, etc. One may either ask or inquire one's way. In this sense ask and inquire are nearly interchangeable, chiefly differing in the fact that ask is the popular and inquire the more formal word, tho ask has place in the best literary use. Also, ask has more reference to the presence of a second person; the solitary investigator inquires rather than asks the cause of some phenomenon; in this sense ask is often used reflexively; as, "I asked myself why this happened." Inquire into thus becomes a natural synonym for examine, investigate, etc. Compare ASK; EXAMINE; QUESTION, v. & n.—Prep.: inquire into any matter demanding investigation; about, concerning, or in regard to the transaction; inquire of one who can give information; inquire at a house for a person or thing; after one's health; inquire out items or individuals from a mass or aggregate.—in-quir'a-bl(e, a.—in-quir'er, n.—in-quir'ing, pa. -ly, adv.—in"qui-si'tion, n. 1. [I-] *R. Syn.: examination, interrogation, interrogatory, investigation, query, question, research, scrutiny, study. See QUESTION.—Ant.: see synonyms for ANSWER.

in-quis'i-tiv(e[s], 1 in-kwiz'ı-tiv; 2 ĭn-kwĭz'ı-tĭv, a. 1. Given to questioning; curious. 2. Inclined to the pursuit of knowledge.

Syn.: curious, inquiring, intrusive, meddlesome, meddling, peeping, prying, scrutinizing, searching. An inquisitive person is one who is bent on finding out all that can be found out by inquiry, especially of little and personal matters, and hence is generally meddlesome and prying. Inquisitive may be used in a good sense, tho in such connection inquiring is to be preferred; as, an inquiring mind. As applied to a state of mind, curious denotes a keen and rather pleasurable desire to know fully something to which one's attention has been called, but without the active tendency that inquisitive implies; a well-bred person may be curious to know, but will not be inquisitive in trying to ascertain, what is of interest in the affairs of another.—Ant.: apathetic, careless, heedless, inattentive, indifferent, unconcerned, uninterested.—Prep.: inquisitive about, concerning, in regard to, regarding trifles.

—in-quis'i-tiv(e-ly[s], adv.—in-quis'i-tiv(e-ness[s], n.—in-quis'i-tor, n. 1. One who makes inquiry or investigation. 2. [I-] A member of the court of the Inquisition. 3. A curious person.—in-quis"i-to'ri-al, a. -ly, adv.

in-sane', 1 in-sēn'; 2 ĭn-sān', a. 1. Not sane; crazy; irrational. 2. Set apart for the insane. [< L. in-, not, + sanus, sound.]

Syn.: absurd, cracked, crazed, crazy, delirious, demented, deranged, distracted, frantic, frenzied, irrational, lunatic, mad, maniac, maniacal, monomaniac, out of one's head, mind, senses, or wits, wandering, wild. Crazed and crazy are popular words (identical in meaning with the colloquial cracked) to denote what is preferably expressed by insane in literary, medical, and legal use. Compare synonyms for INSANITY.—Ant.: clear, collected, level-headed, sage, sane, sensible, sober, sound, wise.—in-sane'ly, adv.

in-san'i-ty, 1 in-san'ı-tı; 2 ĭn-săn'i-ty, n. A morbid condition of mind due to brain-disease; derangement; lunacy. in-sane'ness‡; in-sa'nie†.

Syn.: aberration, alienation, craziness, delirium, dementia, derangement, frenzy, hallucination, lunacy, madness, mania, monomania. Of these terms insanity is the most exact and comprehensive, including in its widest sense all morbid conditions of mind due to diseased action of the brain or nervous system. Craziness is a vague popular term for any sort of disordered mental action, or for conduct suggesting it. Lunacy originally denoted intermittent insanity, supposed to be dependent on the changes of the moon (L. luna): the term is now applied in general and legal use to any form of mental unsoundness except idiocy. Madness is the old popular term, now less common, for insanity in its widest sense, but with suggestion of excitement, akin to mania. In the derived sense, lunacy denotes what is insanely foolish, madness what is insanely desperate. Derangement is a common euphemism for insanity. Delirium is always temporary, and is specifically the insanity of disease, as in acute fevers. Dementia is a general weakening of the mental powers: the word is specifically applied to senile insanity, dotage. Aberration is eccentricity of mental action due to an abnormal state of the perceptive faculties, and is manifested by error in perceptions and rambling thought. Hallucination is the apparent perception of that which does not exist or is not present to the senses, as the seeing of specters or of reptiles in delirium tremens. Monomania is mental derangement as to one subject or object. Frenzy and mania are forms of raving and furious insanity. Compare DELUSION; FRENZY; IDIOCY.—Ant.: clearness, good sense, lucidity, rationality, sanity.

[< F. interposer, < inter (see INTER-) + poser; see POSE1, v.]
Syn.: arbitrate, intercede, intercept, interfere, intermeddle, interrupt, meddle, mediate. To interpose is to place or come between other things or persons, usually as a means of obstruction or prevention of some effect or result that might otherwise occur. Intercede and interpose are used in a good sense; intermeddle always in a bad sense, and interfere frequently so. To intercede is to come between persons who are at variance, and plead with the stronger in behalf of the weaker. One may interpose with authority; he intercedes by petition. To intermeddle is to thrust oneself into the concerns of others with a petty officiousness; meddling commonly arises from idle curiosity; "every fool will be meddling," Prov. xx, 3; to interfere is to intrude into others' affairs with more serious purpose, with or without acknowledged right or propriety. Intercept is applied to an object that may be seized or stopped while in transit; as, to intercept a letter or a messenger; interrupt is applied to an action which might or should be continuous, but is broken in upon (L. rumpere, to break) by some disturbing power; as, the conversation was interrupted. One who arbitrates or mediates must do so by the request or at least with the consent of the contending parties; the other words of the group imply that he steps in of his own accord.—Ant.: avoid, hold aloof, hold off, keep aloof, keep away, keep clear, keep out, let alone, let be, retire, stand aside, stand away, stand back, stand off, withdraw.—Prep.: Interpose between the combatants; in the matter.

"Into indicates motion, change, entrance, in a more marked degree than in." FALLOWS 100,000 Synonyms and Antonyms.

There are cases where either in or into might be used, but with some difference of meaning.

"The most awful idea connected with the catacombs is their interminable extent, and the possibility of going astray into this labyrinth of darkness." HAWTHORNE Marble Faun ch. 3, p. 39.

Here it would have been correct to say, "going astray in this labyrinth of darkness," i. e., within it, so as to be enclosed by it. "Going astray into it" suggests the moving on and on to and toward new, more distant, and more hopeless depths, and is hence the more expressive phrase.—Ant.: away from, beyond, by, from, out, out of, past, through.

SYN.: arbiter, arbitrator, justice, referee, umpire. A judge, in the legal sense, is a judicial officer appointed or elected to preside in courts of law, and to decide legal questions duly brought before him; the name is sometimes given to other legally constituted officers; as, the judges of election; in other relations, any person duly appointed to pass upon the merits of contestants or of competing articles may be called a judge; as, the judges at an agricultural fair, or at a race-track; in the widest sense, any person who has good capacity for judging is called a judge; as, a person is said to be a judge of pictures, or a good judge of a horse, etc. In various sports the judge is called an umpire or in some cases the referee; as, the umpire of a game of ball or cricket. In law a referee is appointed by a court to decide disputed matters between litigants; an arbitrator is chosen by the contending parties to decide matters in dispute without action by a court. In certain cases an umpire is appointed by a court to decide where arbitrators disagree. Arbiter, with its suggestion of final and absolute decision, has come to be used only in a high or sacred sense; as, war must now be the arbiter; the Supreme Arbiter of our destinies. The judges of certain courts, as the United States Supreme Court, are technically known as justices.

Syn.: equity, fairness, fair play, faithfulness, honor, impartiality, integrity, justness, law, lawfulness, legality, rectitude, right, righteousness, rightfulness, truth, uprightness, virtue. In its governmental relations, human or divine, justice is the giving to every person exactly what he deserves, not necessarily involving any consideration of what any other may deserve; equity (the quality of being equal) is giving every one as much advantage, privilege, or consideration as is given to any other; it is that which is equally right or just to all concerned; equity is equal justice and is thus a close synonym for fairness and impartiality, but it has a philosophical and legal precision that those words have not. In legal proceedings, the system of equity, devised to supply the insufficiencies of law, deals with cases "to which the law by reason of its universality can not apply." In personal and social relations justice is the rendering to every one what is due or merited, whether in act, word, or thought; in matters of reasoning, or literary work of any kind, justice is close, faithful, unprejudiced, and unbiased adherence to essential truth or fact; we speak of the justice of a statement, or of doing justice to a subject. Integrity, rectitude, right, righteousness, and virtue denote conformity of personal conduct to the moral law, and thus necessarily include justice, which is giving others that which is their due. Lawfulness is an ambiguous word, meaning in its narrower sense mere legality, which may be very far from justice, but in its higher sense signifying accordance with the supreme law of right, and thus including perfect justice. Justness refers rather to logical relations than to practical matters; as, we speak of the justness of a statement or of a criticism. See JUDGE; VIRTUE.—Ant.: dishonesty, inequity, injustice, partiality, unfairness, unlawfulness, unreasonableness, untruth, wrong.

Syn.: connection, relative, relation. Kinsman is preferred in certain cases, on the ground of greater clearness, to relative, relation, connection. A kinsman is a "man's kin," or one of his own blood; thus, a brother or a cousin is one's kinsman; a man's relative or relation is one who is related to him, either by blood, as a brother (a kinsman), or by law, as a brother-in-law (not a kinsman), or, loosely, by some other bond. Connection is still more vague and unsatisfactory. The same applies to kinswoman. See KINDRED.

know'ing, 1 nō'iŋ; 2 nō'ing, pa. Having perception or knowledge; done consciously or on purpose; shrewd; cute.

Syn.: acute, astute, clever, cunning, discerning, intelligent, keen, penetrating, sagacious, sharp, shrewd. A knowing look, air, etc., indicates practical knowledge with a touch of shrewdness, and perhaps of cunning; in regard to some special matter, it indicates the possession of reserved knowledge which the person could impart if he chose. Knowing has often a slightly invidious sense. We speak of a knowing rascal, meaning cunning or shrewd within a narrow range, but of a knowing horse or dog, in the sense of sagacious, implying that he knows more than is commonly expected of such an animal. A knowing child has more knowledge than would be looked for at his years, perhaps more than is quite desirable, while to speak of a child as intelligent is altogether complimentary. See ASTUTE; CLEVER; INTELLIGENT; WISE.—Ant.: dull, gullible, senseless, silly, simple, stolid, stupid, undiscerning, unintelligent.—know'ingly, adv. 1. With knowledge. 2. Shrewdly; slyly.

(2) Actual or possible range of information. (3) Specific information; notice. 5‖. Sexual intercourse. knoul'echet†.

Syn.: acquaintance, apprehension, cognition, cognizance, comprehension, erudition, experience, information, intelligence, instruction, learning, light, lore, perception, recognition, scholarship, science, wisdom. Knowledge is all that the mind knows, from whatever source derived or obtained, or by whatever process: the aggregate of facts, truths, or principles acquired or retained by the mind, including alike the intuitions native to the mind and all that has been learned respecting phenomena, causes, laws, principles, literature, etc. There is a tendency to regard knowledge as accurate and systematic, and to a certain degree complete. We say of a studious man that he has a great store of knowledge, or of an intelligent man of the world, that he has a fund of varied information. We speak of perception of external objects, apprehension of intellectual truth. Simple perception gives a limited knowledge of external objects, merely as such; the cognition of the same objects is a knowledge of them in some relation; cognizance is the formal or official recognition of something as an object of knowledge; we take cognizance of it. Intuition is primary knowledge antecedent to all teaching or reasoning; experience is knowledge that has entered directly into one's own life; as, a child's experience that fire will burn. See ACQUAINTANCE; EDUCATION; LEARNING; SCIENCE; WISDOM.—Ant.: ignorance, illiteracy, inexperience, misapprehension, misconception, misunderstanding, unfamiliarity.

Syn.: barbarism, dialect, diction, expression, gibberish, idiom, jargon, lingo, mother tongue, patois, speech, tongue, vernacular. Language signified originally expression of thought by spoken words; now in its widest sense it signifies expression of thought by any means; as, the language of the eyes, the language of flowers. Speech denotes the power of articulate utterance; we can speak of the language of animals, but not of their speech. A tongue is the speech or language of some one people, country, or race. A dialect is a special mode of speaking a language peculiar to some locality or class, not recognized as in accordance with the best usage; a barbarism is a perversion of a language by ignorant foreigners, or some usage akin to that. Idiom refers to the construction of phrases and sentences, and the way of forming or using words; it is the peculiar mold in which each language casts its thought. The great difficulty of translation is to give the thought expressed in one language in the idiom of another. A dialect may be used by the highest as well as the lowest within its range; a patois is distinctly illiterate, belonging to the lower classes; those who speak a patois understand the cultured form of their own language, but speak only the degraded form, as in the case of the Italian lazzaroni or the former negro slaves in the United States. Vernacular, from the Latin, has the same general sense as the Saxon mother tongue, of one's native language, or that of a people; as, the Scriptures were translated into the vernacular. See DICTION.—lan'guaged, a. 1. Having or speaking a language: chiefly in composition. 2. Learned in languages.

Syn.: canon, code, command, commandment, decree, edict, enactment, formula, mandate, order, ordinance, principle, regulation, rule, statute. Law in its ideal is the statement of a principle of right in mandatory form, by competent authority, with adequate penalty for disobedience; in common use the term is applied to any legislative act, however imperfect or unjust. Command and commandment are personal and particular; as, the commands of a parent; the Ten Commandments. An edict is the act of an absolute sovereign or other authority; we speak of the edict of an emperor, the decree of a court. A mandate is specific for an occasion or a purpose; a superior court issues its mandate to an inferior court to send up its records. Statute is the recognized legal term for a specific law; enactment is the more vague and general expression. We speak of algebraic or chemical formulas, municipal ordinances, military orders, army regulations, ecclesiastical canons, the rules of a business house. Law is often used, also, for a recognized principle, whose violation is attended with injury or loss that acts like a penalty; as, the laws of business; the laws of nature. In more strictly scientific use, a natural law is simply a recognized system of sequences or relations; as, Kepler's laws of planetary distances. See JUSTICE, LEGISLATION.

Syn.: code, economy, jurisprudence, law, polity. A code is a system of laws; jurisprudence is the science of law, or a system of laws scientifically considered, classed, and interpreted; legislation, primarily the act of legislating, denotes also the body of statutes enacted by a legislative body; an economy is a body of laws and regulations, with the entire system, political or religious, especially the latter, of which they form a part; as, the code of Draco, Roman jurisprudence, British legislation, the Mosaic economy. The Mosaic economy is known also as the Mosaic law, and we speak of the English common law, or the law of nations. Polity (Gr. politeia, from polis, a city) signifies the form, constitution, or method of government of a nation, state, church, or other institution; in usage it differs from economy as applying rather to the system itself, while economy applies especially to the method of administration or to the system as administered; an economy might be termed a polity considered with especial reference to its practical administration, hence commonly with special reference to details or particulars, while polity has more reference to broad principles. Law, as a collective noun, includes not only all special laws, but the principles on which they are based.

[< AS. length, < lang, long.] —at length. 1. After an interval of expectation; finally; at last. 2. At full length; without omission or contraction.

Syn.: at last. The two prepositional phrases at last and at length are quite distinct in meaning and are not, in strict usage, interchangeable. The assumption that at length means the same as at last, and is therefore superfluous, is an error. Both at length and at last presuppose long waiting; but at last views what comes after the waiting as a finality; at length views it as intermediate with reference to action or state that continues, or to results that are yet to follow; as, "I have invited him often, and at length he is coming"; "I have invited him often, and at last he has come"; "At length he began to recover"; "At last he died." "At last he concluded" is correct, but "At last he began" would seem somewhat grotesque. The distinction appears clearly in the two following quotations from Milton: "Scarce thus at length failed speech recovered sad." P. L. bk. iv, l. 357. "O, then, at last relent." P. L. bk. iv, l. 79.—length'wise, adv. In a longitudinal direction. length'ways†.—length'y, a. [LENGTH'I-ER; LENGTH'I-EST.] Having length; unduly long. —length'i-ly, adv.—length'i-ness, n.

S.], an interest-bearing bond of several series authorized by Congress (1917–18), ranging in value from $50.00 to $100,000.

Syn.: emancipation, freedom, independence, license. In general terms, it may be said that freedom is absolute, liberty relative; freedom is the absence of restraint, liberty is the removal or avoidance of restraint. The two words are constantly interchanged; the slave is set at liberty, or gains his freedom; but freedom is the nobler word. Independence is said of states or nations, freedom and liberty of individuals; the independence of the United States did not secure liberty or freedom to its slaves. Liberty keeps quite strictly to the thought of being clear from restraint or compulsion; freedom takes a wider range, applying to other oppressive influences; thus, we speak of freedom from annoyance or intrusion. See PERMISSION. License is, in its limited sense, a permission or privilege granted by adequate authority, a bounded liberty; in the wider sense, license is an ignoring and defiance of all that should restrain, and a reckless doing of all that individual caprice or passion may choose to do—a base and dangerous counterfeit of freedom. See PERMISSION; RIGHT.—Ant.: captivity, compulsion, constraint, imprisonment, necessity, obligation, oppression, serfdom, servitude, slavery, superstition.

li-bid′i-nous, 1 lı-bid′ı-nus; 2 lı-bĭd′i-nŭs, a. Lustful; lewd. [< L. libidinosus, full of lust.]

lie1, n. 1. The position or arrangement in which a thing lies; lay. 2. The lair of an animal.

lie2, n. An untruth; falsehood; something that creates a false impression. [< AS. lige, < leōgan, lie.]

Syn.: deceit, deception, fabrication, falsehood, untruth. A lie is the uttering of what one knows to be false with intent to deceive. The novel or drama is not a lie, because not meant to deceive; the ancient teaching that the earth was flat was not a lie, because not then known to be false. Untruth is more than lack of accuracy, implying always lack of veracity; but it is a somewhat milder and more dignified word than lie. See DECEPTION; FRAUD.—Ant.: fact, truth, veracity.

—white lie, an untruth uttered or implied in deference to conventionality, expediency, or courtesy; a fib.

Syn.: vitality. Life is the state of actual living; vitality is the power of living or the capacity of maintaining life; reptiles have remarkable vitality. Life may also be used for the vital principle; as, the life of a seed. Figuratively, we speak of the vitality of a truth, a prejudice, an error. See WARMTH.—Ant.: death, decease, dissolution.

life'less, 1 laif'les; 2 lif'lĕs, a. Destitute of life; dead; listless; dull; insensible.—life'less-ly, adv.—life'less-ness, n.

Syn.: dead, deceased, defunct, dull, extinct, inanimate, inert, spiritless, torpid. Dead primarily applies to a once living organism from which life has departed; this original meaning controls the derived senses; inanimate primarily applies to that which never had life; we speak of a slain warrior as dead; of a rock as inanimate. Lifeless may be used in either connection; as, of the lifeless form of the warrior; the lifeless rock. Lifeless may be also used of that which exhibits none of the signs of life, as one may be said to fall lifeless in a swoon, comparable to which is the popular expression, a dead faint. The derived meanings of these words are very many. A picture, a statue, a poem, an actor's rendering of his part may be spoken of as lifeless, or less frequently as inanimate; we speak of a dead book, dead capital, a dead wall, and even of a dead (i. e. a dull or nonresonant) sound. Deceased is in formal and approved use as a euphemism for dead; defunct is now somewhat contemptuous or opprobrious; as, a defunct author, defunct mythologies. Extinct implies cessation of vitality or force; as, an extinct race; an extinct volcano. See DEAD, FLAT.—Ant.: active, alive, animated, live, living, stirring, vigorous.

(3) Mental or spiritual illumination. 2. A source of light, as a flame, lamp, beacon, etc.; also, an emission of light. 3. That which admits light; a window or pane. 4. The state of visibility; hence, publicity. 5. Daytime; dawn. 6. Aspect. 7. A part of a picture with reference to its luminosity. 8. The power of vision; perception. [< AS. leōht, light.]
Syn.: blaze, flame, flare, flash, flicker, glare, gleam, glimmer, glisten, glistening, glitter, glow, illumination, incandescence, scintillation, sheen, shimmer, shine, shining, sparkle, twinkle, twinkling. A flame is both hot and luminous; if it contains few solid particles it will yield little light, tho it may afford intense heat, as in the case of a hydrogen-flame. A blaze is an extensive, brilliant flame. Light is the general term for any luminous effect discernible by the eye, from the faintest phosphorescence to the blaze of the noonday sun. A flare is a wavering flame or blaze; a flash is a light that appears and disappears in an instant; as, a flash of lightning; the flash of gunpowder. The glare and glow are steady, the glare painfully bright, the glow subdued; as, the glare of torches; the glow of dying embers. Shine and shining refer to a steady or continuous emission of light; sheen is a faint shining, usually by reflection. Glimmer, glitter, and shimmer denote wavering light. We speak of the glimmer of distant lamps through the mist; of the shimmer of waves in sun*light* or moon*light*. A gleam is not wavering, but transient or intermittent; a sudden gleam of light came through the half-open door; a glitter is a hard light; as, the glitter of burnished arms. A sparkle is a sudden light, as of sparks thrown out; scintillation is the more exact and scientific term for the actual emission of sparks, also the figurative term for what suggests such emission; as, scintillations of wit or of genius. Twinkle and twinkling are used of the intermittent light of the fixed stars. Glistening is a shining as from a wet surface. Illumination is a wide-spread, brilliant light, as when all the windows of a house are lighted. The light of incandescence is intense and white like that from metal at a white heat. See KNOWLEDGE.—Ant.: blackness, dark, darkness, dimness, dusk, gloom, gloominess, obscurity, shade, shadow.

Syn.: attend, hark, harken, hear, heed, list. To hear is simply to become conscious of sound, to listen is to make a conscious effort or endeavor to hear. We may hear without listening, as words suddenly uttered in an adjoining room; or we may listen without hearing, as to a distant speaker. Between listen and hear is a difference like that between the words "look" and "see." In listening the ear is intent upon the sound; in attending the mind is intent upon the thought, tho listening implies some attention to the meaning or import of the sound. To heed is not only to attend, but to remember and observe. Harken is nearly obsolete.—Ant.: be deaf to, ignore, neglect, scorn, slight.—Prep.: we listen for what we expect or desire to hear; we listen to what we actually do hear; listen for a step, a signal, a train; listen to the debate.—lis'ten-er, n.—listening post. (Mil.) A post from which soldiers can detect mining or other operations by an enemy.

[OF., < L. literatura, < litera, letter.]

Syn.: belles-lettres, books, literary productions, publications, writings. Literature is collective, referring to all that has been published in some land or age, or in some department of human knowledge; as, the literature of Greece; the literature of the Augustan age; the literature of politics or of art. Literature, used absolutely, denotes what has been called "polite literature" or belles-lettres, i. e., the works collectively that embody taste, feeling, loftiness of thought, and purity and beauty of style, as poetry, history, fiction, and dramatic compositions, including also much of philosophical writing, as the Republic of Plato, and oratorical productions, as the orations of Demosthenes. In the broad sense we can speak of the literature of science; in the narrower sense, we speak of literature and science as distinct departments of knowledge. Literature is also used to signify literary pursuits or occupations; as, to devote one's life to literature. Compare KNOWLEDGE; SCIENCE.

[< AS. lufian, love.]

Syn.: like. Altho their distinction in meaning is one of the peculiar felicities of the English language, love and like are often confounded in use. We love that which ministers to our affections; we like what ministers to appetite, taste, fancy, etc. A man loves his wife and children; he likes roast beef; he likes some good-natured acquaintance whom he could not be said to love, except as he should love all men; he likes a fast boat, a fine house, a pleasing picture, a brisk walk, a chat with friends, a ride through the country, etc. See ADMIRE; LIKE. Compare LOVE, n.—lov'er, n. One who loves; one who is in love.—lov'er-ly, a.—lov'ing, pa.—lov'ing-kind"ness, n. Kindness that comes from personal attachment; specif., the loving care of God for his people. —lov'ing-ly, adv.

[< AS. lufe, < lufian, love.]

Syn.: affection, attachment, attraction, charity, devotion, esteem, feeling, fondness, friendship, liking, passion, regard, tenderness. Affection is kindly feeling, deep, tender, and constant, going out to some person or object, being less fervent and ardent than love. Love is the yearning or outgoing of soul toward something that is regarded as excellent, beautiful, or desirable; love may be briefly defined as strong and absorbing affection for and attraction toward a person or object. Love may denote the sublimest and holiest spiritual affection, as when we are taught that "God is love." Charity has so far swung aside from this original meaning that probably it never can be recalled (compare BENEVOLENCE). The Revised Version uses love in place of charity in 1 Cor. xiii, and elsewhere. Love is more intense, absorbing, and tender than friendship, more intense, impulsive, and perhaps passionate than affection; we speak of fervent love, but of deep or tender affection, or of close, firm, strong friendship. Love is used specifically for personal affection between the sexes, in the highest sense, the love that normally leads to marriage, and subsists throughout all happy wedded life. Love can never properly denote mere animal passion, which is expressed by such words as appetite, desire, lust. One may properly be said to have love for animals, for inanimate objects, or for abstract qualities that enlist the affections, as we speak of love for a horse or a dog, for mountains, woods, ocean, or of love of nature, and love of virtue. Love of articles of food is better expressed by liking, as love, in its full sense, denotes something spiritual and reciprocal, such as can have no place in connection with objects that minister merely to the senses. See ATTACHMENT; FRIENDSHIP.—Ant.: see synonyms for ANTIPATHY; ENMITY; HATRED.—Prep.: love of country; for humanity; love to God and man.

Syn.: male, manful, manlike, manly, mannish, virile. We apply male to the sex, masculine to the qualities, especially to the stronger, hardier, and more imperious qualities that distinguish the male sex; as applied to women, masculine has often the depreciatory sense of unwomanly, rude, or harsh; as, a masculine face or voice, or the like; tho one may say in a commendatory way, she acted with masculine courage or decision. Manlike may mean only having the outward appearance or semblance of a man, or may be closely equivalent to manly. Manly refers to all the qualities and traits worthy of a man; manful, especially to the valor and prowess that become a man; we speak of a manful struggle, manly decision; we say manly gentleness or tenderness; we could not say manful tenderness. Mannish is a depreciatory word referring to the mimicry or parade of some superficial qualities of manhood; as, a mannish boy or woman. Masculine may apply to the distinctive qualities of the male sex at any age; virile applies to the distinctive qualities of mature manhood only, as opposed not only to feminine or womanly but to childish, and is thus an emphatic word for sturdy, intrepid, etc.—Ant.: see synonyms for FEMININE.

Syn.: harmony, music, unison. Harmony is simultaneous; melody is successive; harmony is the pleasing correspondence of two or more notes sounded at once, melody the pleasing succession of a number of notes continuously following one another. A melody may be wholly in one part; harmony must be of two or more parts. Accordant notes of different pitch sounded simultaneously produce harmony; unison is the simultaneous sounding of two or more notes of the same pitch. When the pitch is the same, there may be unison between sounds of very different volume and quality, as a voice and a bell may sound in unison. Tones sounded at the interval of an octave are also said to be in unison, altho this is not literally exact; this usage arises from the fact that bass and tenor voices in attempting to sound the same note as the soprano and alto will in fact sound a note an octave below. Music may denote the simplest melody or the most complex and perfect harmony. A symphony (apart from its technical orchestral sense) is any pleasing consonance of musical sounds, vocal or instrumental, as of many accordant voices or instruments. Compare METER; SONG; TUNE.—Ant.: discord, dissonance.

Syn.: benevolence, benignity, blessing, clemency, compassion, favor, forbearance, forgiveness, gentleness, grace, kindness, lenience, leniency, lenity, mildness, pardon, pity, tenderness. Mercy is the exercise of less severity than one deserves, or in a more extended sense, the granting of kindness or favor beyond what one may rightly claim. Clemency is a colder word than mercy, and without its religious associations, signifying mildness and moderation in the use of power where severity would have legal or military, rather than moral, sanction; it often denotes a habitual mildness of disposition on the part of the powerful, and is matter rather of good nature or policy than of principle. Leniency or lenity denotes an easy-going avoidance of severity; these words are more general and less magisterial than clemency; we should speak of the leniency of a parent, the clemency of a conqueror. Grace is favor, kindness, or blessing shown to the undeserving; forgiveness, mercy, and pardon are exercised toward the ill-deserving. Pardon remits the outward penalty which the offender deserves; forgiveness dismisses resentment or displeasure from the heart of the one offended; mercy seeks the highest possible good of the offender. Mercy is also used in the wider sense of refraining from harshness or cruelty toward those who are in one's power without fault of their own; as, they besought the robber to have mercy. See LENITY; PITY.—Ant.: cruelty, hardness, harshness, implacability, justice, penalty, punishment, revenge, rigor, severity, sternness, vengeance.—Prep.: the mercy of God to or toward sinners; have mercy on or upon one.—mer'ci-less, a. Having or showing no mercy. meteor., abbr. Meteorological, meteorology.

me'ter[1], } n. 1 mī'tər; 2 mē'ter, n. 1. Pros. Definite measurement by feet and lines of a given length; also, a specific rhythmic arrangement of words. 2. Hymnology. The character of a stanza as being composed of a given number of lines, each composed of feet of a given number and character. 3. Mus. (1) The character of a composition as being divisible into measures equal in time and length and similar in rhythmic construction. (2) A foot, as a subdivision of a bar or measure. [< OF. metre, < L. metrum, < Gr. metron, measure.]

Syn.: euphony, measure, rhythm, verse. Euphony is agreeable linguistic sound, however produced; meter, measure, and rhythm denote agreeable succession of sounds in the utterance of connected words; euphony may apply to a single word or even a single syllable; the other words apply to lines, sentences, paragraphs, etc.; rhythm and meter may be produced by accent only, as in English, or by accent and quantity combined, as in Greek or Italian; rhythm or measure may apply either to prose or to poetry, or to music, dancing, etc.; meter is more precise than rhythm, applies only to poetry, and denotes a measured rhythm with regular divisions into verses, stanzas, strophes, etc. A verse is strictly a metrical line, but the word is often used as synonymous with stanza. Verse, in the general sense, denotes metrical writing without reference to the thought involved; as, prose and verse. Compare MELODY; POETRY.

me'ter[2], } n. 1. An instrument, apparatus, or machine for measuring fluids, gases, electric currents, grain, etc., and recording the results obtained. 2. Any person or thing that measures. [< AS. metan, measure; confused with -METER.]—me'ter-age, n. The act or result of measuring; also, the charge for measurement.

me'ter[3], } n. The fundamental unit of length in the metric system, originally defined as one ten-millionth of the distance on the earth's surface from the pole to the equator: 39.37 inches. [< F. mètre (OF. metre), < L. metrum, < Gr. metron, measure.]

-meter, suffix. Indicating (1) that by which a thing is measured, as calorimeter, voltmeter; (2) a measure in poetry, as hexameter, pentameter. [< L. metrum, < Gr. metron, measure.]

mete'-yard"†, n. A yard-measure.

Meth., abbr. Methodist.

meth'ane, 1 meth'ēn; 2 mĕth'ān, n. A stable colorless gas formed by decomposition of vegetable matter: an important constituent of illuminating-gas. [< METHYL.] marsh'-gas"†.

me-theg'lin, 1 mı-theg'lın; 2 me-thĕg'lin, n. A fermented drink made of water and honey; mead. [< W. meddyglyn, < medd, mead, + llyn, liquor.]

me-thinks', 1 mī-thiŋks'; 2 mē-thĭŋks', v. impers. [ME-THOUGHT'.] [Poet.] It seems to me. [< AS. mē thynceth; mē, dat. s. of ic, I; thynceth, 3d per. s. pres. ind. act. of thyncan, seem.]

meth'od, 1 meth'ad; 2 mĕth'od, n. 1. A general or established way or order of doing. 2. Suitable and convenient arrangement. 3. Orderly procedure. 4. Nat. Hist. The arrangement of natural bodies according to their common characteristics. 5. A mode of applying logical principles to the discovery, confirmation, or elucidation of truth. [< Gr. methodos, < meta, after, + hodos, way.] Syn.: see MANNER; RULE; SYSTEM.

—Montessori method, a system of teaching small children by training their sense-perception, and by directing their activity rather than by controlling it: devised by Dr. Maria Montessori, of Rome, Italy, in 1907.—me-thod'i-cal, a. 1. Given to or characterized by orderly arrangement. 2. Arranged with method. me-thod'ic‡.—me-thod'i-cal-ly, adv.—meth'od-ize, v. [-IZED; -IZ'ING.] I. t. To subject to method; regulate. II. i. To act methodically. meth'od-ist‡. Syn.: see REGULATE.—meth"od-ol'o-gy, n. The science of method.

Meth'od-ist, 1 meth'ad-ist; 2 mĕth'od-ĭst, n. 1. A member of any branch of the Protestant Christian church that has grown out of the religious movement begun by John Wesley. 2. [m-] An observer of method or order.—meth'od-ism, n. 1. The state of being methodical. 2. [M-] The doctrines, polity, and worship of the Methodists.—meth"od-is'tic, meth"od-is'ti-cal, a. 1. Given to methodism. 2. [M-] Relating to the Methodists.

meth'ol, 1 meth'ōl or -ol; 2 mĕth'ōl or -ŏl, n. Chem. Any primary alcohol, especially methyl alcohol. [< Gr. methy, wine, + -OL.]

me-thought', 1 mī-thôt'; 2 mē-thôt', imp. of METHINKS, v.

Me-thu'se-lah, 1 mı-thiū'sı-la; 2 me-thū'se-la, n. Bib. Son of Enoch; a Hebrew patriarch; lived 969 years. Gen. v, 27.

meth'yl, 1 meth'il; 2 mĕth'yl, n. Chem. An organic radical, existing only in combination, as in methyl alcohol, etc. [< MET- + Gr. hylē, wood.] meth'ule‡.—meth'y-late, vt. To mix or saturate with methyl or methyl alcohol.—meth'y-lene, n. An organic radical known only in combination.—me-thyl'ic, a. Pertaining to or containing methyl.

me-tic'u-lous, 1 mı-tik'yu-lus; 2 me-tic'yu-lŭs, a. Careful about trivial matters; finical; particular. [< L. meticulosus, < metus, fear.]—me-tic'u-lous-ly, adv.

mé"tier', 1 mē"tyē'; 2 mę"tyę', n. Trade; profession. [F.]

mé"tis', 1 mē"tīs'; 2 mę"tīs', n. Any one of mixed blood, as a mulatto. [F., = MESTIZO.] me"tisse'‡.—mē"tis'sage, n. Miscegenation.

meton., abbr. Metonymy.

me-ton'y-my, 1 mı-ton'ı-mı; 2 me-tŏn'y-my, n. A figure of speech that consists in the naming of a thing by one of its attributes, as "the crown" for the "king" or the "royal power." [< Gr.[LL] metōnymia, < meta, after, + onyma, name.]—met"o-nym'ic, a. met"o-nym'i-cal‡.—met"o-nym'i-cal-ly, adv.

met'o-pe[1], 1 met'o-pi; 2 mĕt'o-pē, n. Arch. A square slab, sculptured or plain, between triglyphs in a Doric frieze. [< Gr. metopē, < meta, between, + opē, hollow.]

met'o-pe[2], n. The face, forehead, or frontal surface. [< Gr. metōpon, forehead, < meta, between, + ōps (ōp-), eye.]

me'tre, n. Same as METER.

met'ric, 1 met'rik; 2 mĕt'ric, a. 1. Pertaining to measure or meter. 2. Pertaining to the meter as a unit of measurement or to the metric system.

The Metric System.

This is a system of weights and measures depending upon the meter, in which the original factors are derived from the meter. The system includes measures of length, of which the meter is the unit; measures of surface, of which the are is the unit; measures of capacity, of which the liter is the unit; and weights, of which the gram is the unit. Ascending in value from each unit the measure is multiplied by ten, and bears a Greek prefix indicating its value, as decameter, which is 10 meters; hectometer, which is 100 meters; kilometer, which is 1,000 meters; and myriameter, which is 10,000 meters. Similarly descending in value the terms bear Latin prefixes indicating their relation to the unit, as decimeter, which is $^1/_{10}$ of a meter; centimeter, which is $^1/_{100}$ of a meter; and millimeter, which is $^1/_{1000}$ of a meter. The following tables show the various units with corresponding factors in other systems. The metric system has been legalized by the United States and Great Britain, is in use in almost every civilized nation, and is the accepted standard among scientific men of all nations.

Measures of Length.

Metric Denomination and Value.		Equivalent in Common Use.
myr'i-a-me"ter	10,000 m	6.214 miles
kil'o-me"ter	1,000 m	0.62137 mile (3,280 feet, 10 inches)
hec'to-me"ter	100 m	328 feet, 1 inch dec'a-me"ter	10 m	393.7 inches
me'ter	1 m	39.37 inches
dec'i-me"ter	$^1/_{10}$ m	3.937 inches
cen'ti-me"ter	$^1/_{100}$ m	0.3937 inch
mil'li-me"ter	$^1/_{1000}$ m	0.03937 inch

NOTE. In the United States the value of the meter is legalized at 39.37 inches, while in Great Britain and France its exact value is given as 39.37079 inches.

FACTORS FOR CONVERSION: One inch = 0.0254 meter; one foot = 0.3048 meter; one mile = 1609.35 meters. ABBREVIATIONS*: cm = centimeter, dm = decimeter, km = kilometer, m = meter, mm = millimeter.

Measures of Capacity.

[< AS. gemynd, < munan, think.]

Syn.: brain, consciousness, disposition, instinct, intellect, intelligence, reason, sense, soul, spirit, thought, understanding. Mind, in a general sense, includes all the powers of sentient being apart from the physical factors in bodily faculties and activities; in a limited sense, mind is nearly synonymous with intellect, but includes disposition, or the tendency toward action, as appears in the phrase "to have a mind to work." The intellect is that assemblage of faculties which is concerned with knowledge, as distinguished from emotion and volition. Understanding is the Saxon word of the same general import, but is chiefly used of the reasoning powers; the understanding, which Sir Wm. Hamilton has called "the faculty of relations and comparisons," is distinguished by many philosophers from reason in that "reason is the faculty of the higher cognitions or a priori truth." Thought, the act, process, or power of thinking, is often used to denote the thinking faculty, and especially the reason. The instinct of animals is now held by many philosophers to be of the same nature as the intellect of man, but inferior and limited; yet the apparent difference is very great. "An instinct is a propensity prior to experience and independent of instruction." PALEY, Natural Philosophy, ch. 18. In this sense we speak of human instincts, thus denoting tendencies independent of reasoning or instruction. As the seat of mental activity, brain (colloquially brains) is often used as a synonym for mind, intellect, intelligence. Sense may be an antonym of intellect, as when we speak of the sense of hearing; but sense is used also as denoting clear mental action, good judgment, acumen; as, he is a man of sense, or, he showed good sense; sense, even in its material signification, must be reckoned among the activities of mind, tho dependent on bodily functions; the mind, not the eye, really sees; the mind, not the ear, really hears. Consciousness includes all that a sentient being perceives, knows, thinks, or feels, from whatever source arising and of whatever character, kind, or degree, whether with or without distinct thinking, feeling, or willing; we speak of the consciousness of the brute or of the sage. See GENIUS; SOUL; UNDERSTANDING.—Ant.: body, brawn, brute force, material substance, matter.

Syn.: adversity, affliction, bereavement, blow, calamity, chastening, chastisement, disappointment, disaster, distress, failure, hardship, harm, ill, ill fortune, ill luck, misadventure, mischance, misery, mishap, reverse, ruin, sorrow, stroke, trial, tribulation, trouble, visitation. Misfortune is adverse fortune or any instance thereof, any untoward event, usually of lingering character or consequences, and such as the sufferer is not deemed directly responsible for; as, he had the misfortune to be born blind. Any considerable disappointment, failure, or misfortune, as regards outward circumstances, as loss of fortune, position, and the like, when long continued or attended with enduring consequences, constitutes adversity. For the loss of friends by death we commonly use affliction or bereavement. Calamity and disaster are used of sudden and severe misfortunes, often overwhelming; ill fortune and ill luck, of lighter troubles and failures. We speak of the misery of the poor, the hardships of the soldier. Affliction, chastening, trial, and tribulation have all an especially religious bearing, suggesting some disciplinary purpose of God with beneficent design. Affliction may be keen and bitter, but brief; tribulation is long and wearing. We speak of an affliction, but rarely of a tribulation, since tribulation is viewed as a continuous process, which may endure for years or for a lifetime; but we speak of our daily trials. Compare ACCIDENT; ADVERSITY; BLOW; CATASTROPHE; LOSS.—Ant.: blessing, boon, comfort, consolation, good fortune, good luck, gratification, happiness, joy, pleasure, prosperity, relief, success, triumph.

mod'el, 1 med'el; 2 mŏd'ĕl. I. vt. & vi. [-ELED or -ELLED, MOD'ELD[3]; -EL-ING or -EL-LING.] 1. To form on or over something as a model; shape: often followed by on. 2. In drawing and painting, to give an appearance of relief to, as a face. 3. To make a model. 4. To assume a form like that of a model. II. a. Answering or used as a model; suitable for a model; worthy to be imitated. III. n. 1. An object representing accurately something to be made or already existing; whatever constitutes a pattern or example; a plaster or clay original of a statue, etc. 2. That which is taken as a pattern; a person who poses as a copy for a painter or sculptor, or woman who tries on cloaks, etc., as in a salesroom, to exhibit them to advantage. 3. That which strikingly resembles something else. [< L.[OF] modulus, measure.]

Syn.: archetype, copy, design, ectype, example, facsimile, image, imitation, mold, original, pattern, prototype, replica, representation, type. A pattern is always, in modern use, that which is to be copied; a model may be either the thing to be copied or the copy that has been made from it; as, the models in the Patent Office. A pattern is commonly superficial; a model is usually in relief. A pattern must be closely followed in its minutest particulars by a faithful copyist; a model may allow a great degree of freedom. A sculptor may idealize his living model; his workmen must exactly copy in marble or metal the model he has made in clay. The archetype is the original form, actual or ideal, in accordance with which existing things are made, especially the original form in the mind of the Creator; a prototype is either the original or an authenticated copy that has the authority of the original as a standard to which other objects of its kind must conform, tho the latter sense is comparatively rare. See EXAMPLE; IDEA; IDEAL.—mod'el-er, n. mod'el-ler†.

Syn.: common, correlative, interchangeable, joint, reciprocal. That is common to which two or more persons have the same or equal claims, or in which they have equal interest or participation; that is mutual (Latin mutare, to change) which is freely interchanged; that is reciprocal in respect to which one act or movement is met by a corresponding act or movement in return; we speak of our common country, mutual affection, reciprocal obligations, the reciprocal action of cause and effect, where the effect becomes in turn a cause. In strictness, it is incorrect to say "a mutual friend"; "a common friend" would be more accurate; but "common friend" is practically never used, because of the disagreeable suggestion that attaches to common of ordinary or inferior. "Mutual friend" has high literary authority (of Scott, Dickens, and others) and a considerable usage of good society in its favor, the expression being quite naturally derived from the thoroughly correct phrase "mutual friendship."—Ant.: detached, disconnected, dissociated, distinct, disunited, separate, separated, severed, sundered, unconnected, unreciprocated, unshared.

Syn.: agnomen, appellation, cognomen, denomination, designation, epithet, style, title. Name in the most general sense includes all other words of this group; in the more limited sense a name is personal, an appellation is descriptive, a title is official. In the phrase William the Conqueror, king of England, William is the man's name, which belongs to him personally, independently of any rank or achievement; Conqueror is the appellation which he won by his acquisition of England; king is the title denoting his royal rank. An epithet is by derivation something placed upon a person or thing; the epithet does not strictly belong to an object like a name, but is given to mark some assumed characteristic, good or bad, now usually the latter. An epithet is always an adjective, or a word or phrase used as an adjective, and is properly used to emphasize a characteristic but not to add information, as in the phrase "the sounding sea"; the idea that an epithet is always opprobrious, and that any word used opprobriously is an epithet, is a popular error. Designation may be used much in the sense of appellation, but is far broader and more general in meaning; a designation properly so called rests upon some inherent quality, while an appellation may be fanciful. One's personal name, as John or Mary, is given in infancy, and is often called the given name or Christian name, or simply the first name. The cognomen or surname is the family name which belongs to one by right of birth or marriage. In modern use, style is the legal designation by which a person or house is known in official or business relations; as, the name and style of Baring Brothers. A denomination is a specific, and especially a collective name; the term is applied to a separate religious organization, without the opprobrious meaning attaching to the word sect; also to money or notes of a certain value; as, the sum was in notes of the denomination of one thousand dollars. See TERM.—nam'a-bl(ə)‡, a. That may be named. name'a-bl(ə)‡.—name'less, a. 1. Having no name or reputation. 2. Not fit to be named. -ly, adv. -ness, n.—name'ly, adv. That is to say; to wit.—name'sake", n. One who is named after another.

neat[1], 1 nīt; 2 nēt, a. 1. Characterized by strict order and tidiness. 2. Well proportioned; trim; spruce. 3. Clever. 4. Clear of extraneous matter. [< L.[F] nitidus, shining.]

Syn.: clean, cleanly, dapper, natty, nice, orderly, prim, spruce, tidy, trim. That which is clean is simply free from soil or defilement of any kind. Things are orderly when in due relation to other things; a room or desk is orderly when every article is in place; a person is orderly who habitually keeps things so. Tidy denotes that which conforms to propriety in general; an unlaced shoe may be perfectly clean, but is not tidy. Neat refers to that which is clean and tidy, with nothing superfluous, conspicuous, or showy, as when we speak of plain but neat attire; the same idea of freedom from the superfluous appears in the phrases "a neat speech," "a neat turn," "a neat reply," etc. A clean cut has no ragged edges; a neat stroke just does what is intended. Nice is stronger than neat, implying value and beauty; a cheap, coarse dress may be perfectly neat, but would not be termed nice. Spruce is applied to the show and affectation of neatness with a touch of smartness, and is always a term of mild contempt; as, a spruce serving-man. Trim denotes a certain shapely and elegant firmness, often with suppleness and grace; as, a trim suit; a trim figure. Prim applies to a precise, formal, affected nicety. Dapper is spruce with the suggestion of smallness and slightness; natty, a diminutive of neat, suggests minute elegance, with a tendency toward the exquisite; as, a dapper man in a natty business suit. See BECOMING.—Ant.: dirty, disorderly, dowdy, negligent, rough, rude, slouchy, slovenly, soiled, uncared for, untidy.

nec'es-sa-ry, 1 nes'e-sē-ri; 2 nĕs'ĕ-sā-ry. I. a. 1. Being such in its nature or conditions that it must exist, occur, or be true. 2. Essential. 3. Compulsory.

Syn.: compulsory, essential, indispensable, inevitable, needed, needful, required, requisite, unavoidable, undeniable. That which is essential belongs to the essence of a thing, so that the thing can not exist in its completeness without it; that which is indispensable may be only an adjunct, but it is one that can not be spared; vigorous health is essential to an arctic explorer; warm clothing is indispensable. That which is requisite (or required) is so in the judgment of the person requiring it, but not absolutely; thus the requisite is more a matter of personal feeling than the indispensable. Inevitable and unavoidable are applied to things which some at least would escape or prevent, while that which is necessary may meet with no objection; food is necessary, death is inevitable; a necessary conclusion satisfies a thinker; an inevitable conclusion silences opposition. Needed and needful are more concrete than necessary, and respect an end to be attained, while necessary may apply simply to what exists; we speak of a necessary inference; necessary food is what one can not live without, while needful food is that without which he can not enjoy comfort, health, and strength.—Ant.: casual, contingent, needless, non-essential, optional, unnecessary, useless, worthless.—Prep.: necessary to a sequence or a total; for or to a result or a person; unity is necessary to (to constitute) completeness; decision is necessary for command, or for a commander.

II. n. [-RIES[2], pl.] An essential requisite; a necessity. [< L. necessarius, necessary.]—nec"es-sa'ri-an. I. a. Pertaining to necessarianism. II. n. An advocate of necessarianism. ne-ces"si-ta'ri-an†.—nec"es-sa'ri-an-ism, n. Philos. The doctrine that acts of volition are predetermined by the force of motives within; determinism; fatalism; necessity. ne-ces"si-ta'ri-an-ism‡.—nec'-es-sa"ri-ly, adv.—nec'es-sa"ri-ness, n.—ne-ces'si-tate, vt. [-TAT"ED; -TAT"ING.] To make necessary; compel. Syn.: see COMPEL.—ne-ces'si-tous, a. Extremely needy. -ly, adv. -ness, n.—ne-ces'si-ty, n. [-TIES[2], pl.] 1. The quality of being necessary. 2. Something that is necessary. 3. The condition of being in want; poverty. 4. Philos. The doctrine that all events, including the voluntary actions of men, are necessarily predetermined; fatalism.

Syn.: compulsion, destiny, emergency, essential, exigency, extremity, fatality, fate, indispensability, indispensableness, need, requirement, requisite, sine qua non, unavoidableness, urgency, want. An essential is something, as a quality, or element, that belongs to the essence of something else so as to be inseparable from it in its normal condition, or in any complete idea or statement of it. Need and want always imply a lack; necessity may be used in this sense, but in the higher philosophical sense necessity simply denotes the exclusion of any alternative either in thought or fact; righteousness is a necessity (not a need) of the divine nature. Need suggests the possibility of supplying the deficiency which want expresses; to speak of a person's want of decision merely points out a weakness in his character; to say that he has need of decision implies that he can exercise or attain it. As applied to a deficiency, necessity is more imperative than need; a weary person is in need of rest; when rest becomes a necessity he has no choice but to stop work. See PREDESTINATION; WANT. Compare NECESSARY.—Ant.: choice, contingency, doubt, doubtfulness, dubiousness, fortuity, freedom, option, possibility, uncertainty.—Prep.: the necessity of surrender; a necessity for action; this is a necessity to me.

Syn.: carelessness, default, disregard, failure, heedlessness, inadvertence, inattention, indifference, neglectfulness, negligence, oversight, remissness, slackness, slight. Neglect is the failing to take such care, show such attention, pay such courtesy, etc., as may be rightfully or reasonably expected. Negligence, which is the same in origin, may be used in almost the same sense, but with a slighter force, as when Whittier speaks of "the negligence which friendship loves"; but negligence is often used to denote the quality or trait of character of which the act is a manifestation, or to denote the habit of neglecting that which ought to be done. Neglect is transitive, negligence is intransitive; we speak of neglect of his books, friends, or duties, in which cases we could not use negligence; negligence in dress implies want of care as to its arrangement, tidiness, etc.; neglect of one's garments would imply leaving them exposed to defacement or injury, as by dust, moths, etc. Neglect has a passive sense which negligence has not; the child was suffering from neglect, i. e., from being neglected by others; the child was suffering from negligence would imply that he himself was neglectful. The distinction sometimes made that neglect denotes the act, and negligence the habit, is but partially true; one may be guilty of habitual neglect of duty; the wife may suffer from her husband's constant neglect, while the negligence which causes a railroad accident may be that of a moment, and on the part of one ordinarily careful and attentive; in such cases the law provides punishment for criminal negligence. For the trait of character we say negligence rather than neglect. See SLIGHT. For verb see LOSE; SLIGHT.—Ant.: see synonyms for CARE.—Prep.: neglect of duty; of the child by the parent; neglect on the part of the teacher.

not"with-stand'ing, 1 net"with-stand'iŋ; 2 nŏt"with-stănd'ing, adv. In spite of the fact; nevertheless.

not"with-stand'ing, prep. Without regard to.

Syn.: despite, in spite of. Notwithstanding simply states that circumstances shall not be or have not been allowed to withstand; despite and in spite of refer primarily to personal and perhaps spiteful opposition; as, he failed notwithstanding his good intentions; or, he persevered in spite of the most bitter hostility. When despite and in spite of are applied to inanimate things, it is with something of personification; "in spite of the storm" is said as if the storm had a hostile purpose to oppose the undertaking.

not"with-stand'ing, conj. In spite of the fact that.

Syn.: altho, but, howbeit, however, nevertheless, still, tho, yet. However simply waives discussion, and (like the archaic howbeit) says, "be that as it may, this is true"; nevertheless concedes the truth of what precedes, but claims that what follows is none the less true; notwithstanding marshals the two statements face to face, admits the one and its seeming contradiction to the other, while insisting that it can not, after all, withstand the other; as, notwithstanding the force of the enemy is superior, we shall conquer. Yet and still are weaker than notwithstanding, while stronger than but. Tho and altho make as little as possible of the concession, dropping it, as it were, incidentally; as, "tho we are guilty, thou art good"; to say "we are guilty, but thou art good," would make the concession of guilt more emphatic. See BUT.

Syn.: adjuration, affidavit, anathema, ban, blaspheming, blasphemy, curse, cursing, denunciation, execration, imprecation, malediction, profane swearing, profanity, reprobation, swearing, sworn statement, vow. In the highest sense, as in a court of justice, "an oath is a reverent appeal to God in corroboration of what one says," ABBOTT Law Dict.; an affidavit is a sworn statement made in writing in the presence of a competent officer, an adjuration is a solemn appeal to a person in the name of God to speak the truth. An oath is made to man in the name of God; a vow, to God without the intervention, often without the knowledge, of man. In the lower sense, an oath may be mere blasphemy or profane swearing. Anathema, curse, execration, and imprecation are modes of invoking vengeance or retribution from a superhuman power upon the person against whom they are uttered. Anathema is a solemn ecclesiastical condemnation of a person or of a proposition. Curse may be just and authoritative; as, the curse of God; or, it may be wanton and powerless: "so the curse causeless shall not come," Prov. xxvi, 2. Execration expresses most of personal bitterness and hatred; imprecation refers to the coming of the desired evil upon the person against whom it is uttered. Malediction is a general wish of evil, a less usual but very expressive word. ob'sti-nate, 1 əb'stı-nıt; 2 ŏb'sti-nat, a. 1. Persistently and unreasonably resolved in a purpose or opinion; stubborn. 2. Hard to control or cure. [< L.[OF] ob, before, + sto, stand.] Syn.: contumacious, decided, determined, dogged, firm, fixed, headstrong, heady, immovable, indomitable, inflexible, intractable, mulish, obdurate, opinionated, persistent, pertinacious, refractory, resolute, resolved, stubborn, unconquerable, unflinching, unyielding. The headstrong person is not to be stopped in his own course of action, while the obstinate and stubborn is not to be driven to another's way. The headstrong act; the obstinate and stubborn may simply refuse to stir. The most amiable person may be obstinate on some one point; the stubborn person is for the most part habitually so; we speak of obstinate determination, stubborn resistance. Stubborn is the term most frequently applied to animals and inanimate things. Refractory implies more activity of resistance; the stubborn horse balks; the refractory animal plunges, rears, and kicks; metals that resist ordinary processes of reduction are termed refractory. One is obdurate who adheres to his purpose in spite of appeals that would move any tender-hearted or right-minded person. Contumacious refers to a proud and insolent defiance of authority, as of the summons of a court. Pertinacious applies to that which is active and aggressive; pertinacious demand is contrasted with obstinate refusal. The unyielding conduct which we approve we call decided, firm, inflexible, resolute; that which we condemn we are apt to term headstrong, obstinate, stubborn. See INFLEXIBLE; PERVERSE; RESTIVE.—Ant.: amenable, complaisant, compliant, docile, dutiful, gentle, irresolute, obedient, pliable, pliant, submissive, teachable, tractable, undecided, wavering, yielding.—ob'sti-na-cy, n. 1. Persistent and usually unreasonable adherence to one's own opinion or purpose; stubbornness. 2. The quality of being difficult to subdue.—ob'sti-nate-ly, adv.

old, 1 ōld; 2 ōld, a. 1. Having lived or existed in a certain state for a long time; far advanced in life; aged. 2. Having some specified age. 3. Having been made, used, or known for a long time. 4. In old style; antiquated; worthless. 5. Continued or established for a long time; familiar; customary. 6. [Colloq.] Unusual; surprizing; as, a high old time. 7†. More than enough; plenty. [< AS. eald, old.]

Syn.: aged, ancient, antiquated, antique, decrepit, elderly, gray, hoary, immemorial, obsolete, olden, patriarchal, remote, senile, time-honored, time-worn, venerable. That is termed old which has existed long, or which existed long ago. Old, from the Anglo-Saxon, is the most familiar of this group of words. Familiarity, on one side, is near to contempt; thus we say, an old coat, an old hat. On the other hand, familiarity is akin to tenderness, and thus old is a word of endearment; as, "the old homestead," the "old oaken bucket." "Tell me the old, old story!" Olden is a statelier form of old, and is applied almost exclusively to time, not to places, buildings, persons, etc. As regards periods of time, the familiar are also the near; thus, the old times are not too far away for familiar thought and reference; the olden times are more remote, ancient times still further removed. Aged applies chiefly to long-extended human life. Decrepit, gray, and hoary refer to the effects of age on the body exclusively; senile upon the mind also; as, a decrepit frame, senile garrulousness. One may be aged and neither decrepit nor senile. Elderly is applied to those who have passed middle life, but scarcely reached old age. Remote (L. re, back or away, and moveo, move) primarily refers to space, but is extended to that which is far off in time; as, at some remote period. See ANCIENT; OBSOLETE; PRIMEVAL. Compare ANTIQUE.—Ant.: Compare synonyms for NEW; YOUTHFUL.

os"ten-ta'tion, 1 os"ten-tē'shən; 2 ôs"tĕn-tā'shon, n. The act of displaying vauntingly; pretentious parade. [< L. ostento, freq. of ostendo, exhibit.]

Syn.: boast, boasting, display, flourish, pageant, pageantry, parade, pomp, pomposity, pompousness, show, vaunt, vaunting. Ostentation is an ambitious showing forth of whatever is thought adapted to win admiration or praise; ostentation may be without words; as, the ostentation of wealth in fine residences, rich clothing, costly equipage, or the like; when in words, ostentation is rather in manner than in direct statement; as, the ostentation of learning. Boasting is in direct statement, and is louder and more vulgar than ostentation. There may be great display or show with little substance; ostentation suggests something substantial to be shown. Pomp is some material demonstration of wealth and power, as in grand and stately ceremonial, rich furnishings, processions, etc., considered as worthy of the person or occasion in whose behalf it is manifested; pomp is the noble side of that which as ostentation is considered as arrogant and vain. Pageant and pageantry are inferior to pomp, denoting spectacular display designed to impress the public mind, and since the multitude is largely ignorant and thoughtless, the words pageant and pageantry have a suggestion of the transient and unsubstantial. Parade (L. paro, prepare) is an exhibition as of troops in camp going through the evolutions that are to be used in battle, and suggests a lack of earnestness and direct or immediate occasion or demand; hence, in the more general sense, a parade is an uncalled for exhibition, and so used is a more disparaging word than ostentation; ostentation may spring merely from undue self-gratulation, parade implies a desire to impress others with a sense of one's abilities or resources, and is always offensive and somewhat contemptible; as, a parade of wealth or learning. Pomposity and pompousness are the affectation of pomp. See PRIDE.—Ant.: diffidence, modesty, quietness, reserve, retirement, shrinking, timidity.

ought, 1 ôt; 2 ôt, v. 1. To be under moral obligation to be or do. 2. To be fitting or imperative. 3. To be required by necessity. [< AS. āhte, pret. of āgan, owe.]

Syn.: should. One ought to do that which he is under moral obligation or in duty bound to do. Ought is the stronger word, holding most closely to the sense of moral obligation, or sometimes of imperative logical necessity; should may have the sense of moral obligation or may apply merely to propriety or expediency, as in the proverb, "The liar should have a good memory," i. e., he will need it. Ought is sometimes used of abstractions or inanimate things as indicating what the mind deems to be imperative or logically necessary in view of all the conditions; as, these goods ought to go into that space; these arguments ought to convince him; should in such connections would be correct, but less emphatic. Compare DUTY.

Syn.: apologize for, cloak, conceal, cover, excuse, extenuate, hide, mitigate, screen, veil. Cloak, from the French, and palliate, from the Latin, are the same in original signification, but have diverged in meaning; a cloak may be used to hide completely the person or some object carried about the person, or it may but partly veil the figure, making the outlines less distinct; cloak is used in the former, palliate in the latter, sense; to cloak a sin is to attempt to hide it from discovery; to palliate it is to attempt to hide some part of its blameworthiness. "When we palliate our own or others' faults we do not seek to cloak them altogether, but only to extenuate the guilt of them in part." TRENCH Study of Words lect. vi, p. 266. Either to palliate or to extenuate is to admit the fault; but extenuate (L. ex, out, + tenuis, thin) seeks especially to lessen the culpability involved: hence we speak of extenuating circumstances, since circumstances, while they can not change the inherent wrong of an act, may yet lessen the blameworthiness of him who does it; palliating a bad thing by giving it a mild name does not make it less evil. In reference to diseases, to palliate is really to diminish their violence, or partly to relieve the sufferer. See ALLAY; ALLEVIATE; HIDE.—Ant.: see synonyms for AGGRAVATE.—pal"li-a'tion, n. Alleviation; mitigation.—pal'li-a-tiv(es. par'don, 1 pär'dən; 2 pär'don, vt. To remit the penalty of; forego; forgive; excuse. [< L.LL+F per, through, + dono, give.]

Syn.: absolve, acquit, condone, excuse, forgive, overlook, pass by, pass over, remit. Forgive has reference to feelings, pardon to consequences; hence, the executive may pardon, but has nothing to do officially with forgiving. Personal injury may be forgiven by the person wronged; thus, God at once forgives and pardons; the pardoned sinner is exempt from punishment; the forgiven sinner is restored to the divine favor. To pardon is the act of a superior, implying the right to punish; to forgive is the privilege of the humblest person who has been wronged or offended. In law, to remit the whole penalty is equivalent to pardoning the offender; but a part of a penalty may be remitted and the remainder inflicted, as where the penalty includes both fine and imprisonment. To condone is to put aside a recognized offense by some act which restores the offender to forfeited right or privilege, and is the act of a private individual, without legal formalities. To excuse is to overlook some slight offense, error, or breach of etiquette; pardon is often used by courtesy in nearly the same sense. A person may speak of excusing or forgiving himself, but not of pardoning himself. Compare ABSOLVE; MERCY; PARDON, n.—Ant.: castigate, chasten, chastise, condemn, convict, correct, doom, punish, recompense, scourge, sentence, visit.—par'don-a-bl(ĕ), a. That may be pardoned. Syn.: see VENIAL.—par'don-a-bly, adv.—par'don-er, n. 1. One who pardons. 2. Ch. Hist. One commissioned to grant papal indulgences.

par'don, n. 1. Remission of penalty incurred. 2. Courteous forbearance. 3. Law. (1) Remission of guilt. (2) An official warrant declaring the act of pardon.

Syn.: absolution, acquittal, amnesty, forbearance, forgiveness, mercy, oblivion, remission. Acquittal is a release from a charge, after trial, as not guilty. Pardon is a removal of penalty from one who has been adjudged guilty. Acquittal is the adjudging one not to be guilty, as by the decision of a court, commonly of a jury; pardon is the act of the executive. An innocent man may demand acquittal, and need not plead for pardon. Pardon supposes an offense; yet, as our laws stand, to grant a pardon is sometimes the only way to release one who has been wrongly convicted. Oblivion, from the Latin, signifies overlooking and virtually forgetting an offense, so that the offender stands before the law in all respects as if it had never been committed. Amnesty brings the same idea through the Greek. Pardon affects individuals; amnesty and oblivion are said of great numbers. Pardon is oftenest applied to the ordinary administration of law; amnesty or oblivion, to national and military affairs. An amnesty is issued after war, insurrection, or rebellion; it is often granted by "an act of oblivion," and includes a full pardon to all offenders who come within its provisions. Absolution is a religious word (compare synonyms for ABSOLVE). Remission is a discharge from penalty; as, the remission of a fine.—Ant.: penalty, punishment, retaliation, retribution, vengeance.—Prep.: a pardon to or for the offenders; for all offenses; the pardon of offenders or offenses.

Syn.: commonwealth, community, nation, population, race, state, tribe. A community is in general terms the aggregate of persons inhabiting any territory in common and viewed as having common interests; a commonwealth is such a body of persons having a common government, especially a republican government; as, the commonwealth of Massachusetts. A community may be very small; a commonwealth is ordinarily of considerable extent. A people is the aggregate of any public community, either in distinction from their rulers or as including them: a race is a division of mankind in the line of origin and ancestry; the people of the United States includes members of almost every race. The use of people as signifying persons collectively, as in the statement "The hall was full of people," has been severely criticized, but is old and accepted English, and may fitly be classed as idiomatic, and often better than persons. by reason of its collectivism. As Dean Alford suggests, it would make a strange transformation of the old hymn "All people that on earth do well" to sing "All persons that on earth do dwell." The population of a country is simply the aggregate of persons residing within its borders, without reference to race, organization, or allegiance; unnaturalized residents form part of the population, but not of the nation, possessing none of the rights and being subject to none of the duties of citizens. In American usage State signifies one commonwealth of the federal union known as the United States. Tribe is now almost wholly applied to rude peoples with very imperfect political organization; as, the Indian tribes; nomadic tribes. Compare MOB; STATE.

—People's party [U. S.], a political party formed in 1891, its cardinal doctrines being an increase in the currency, public control of railroads, and limitation in the ownership of land.

per-ceive', } 1 pər-sīv'; 2 per-çēv', vt. [PER-CEIV(E)D'; per-ceiv'E', } PER-CEIV'ING.] 1. To have knowledge of through the medium of the senses; see, hear, feel, taste, or smell. 2. To apprehend or become aware of through the reflective or the intuitive faculties; discern; understand; note. [< L.^{OF} percipio, < per, by, + capio, take.]

Syn.: apprehend, be aware of, become cognizant of, comprehend, conceive, know, understand. We perceive, primarily, what is presented through the senses. We apprehend what is presented to the mind, whether through the senses or by any other means. Yet perceive is used in the figurative sense of seeing through to a conclusion, in a way for which usage would not allow us to substitute apprehend; as, "Sir, I perceive that thou art a prophet," John iv, 19. That which we apprehend we catch, as with the hand; that which we conceive we are able to analyze and recompose in our mind; that which we comprehend, we, as it were, grasp around, take together, seize, embrace wholly within the mind. Many things may be apprehended which can not be comprehended; we can apprehend the will of God as revealed in conscience or the Scriptures; we can conceive of certain attributes of Deity, as his truth and justice; but no finite intelligence can comprehend the Divine Nature, in its fullness and perfection. Compare APPREHEND; KNOW; KNOWLEDGE; LEARN.—Ant.: fail of, ignore, lose, misapprehend, misconceive, miss, overlook.—per-ceiv'a-bl(e^{F}, a. That may be perceived; perceptible. — per-ceiv'a-bly, adv. — per-ceiv'er, n.

SYN.: absolute, accurate, blameless, complete, completed, consummate, correct, entire, faultless, finished, holy, ideal, immaculate, infallible, sinless, spotless, stainless, unblemished, undefiled. That is perfect to which nothing can be added and from which nothing can be taken without impairing its excellence, marring its symmetry, or detracting from its worth; in this fullest sense God alone is perfect, but in a limited sense anything may be perfect in its kind; as, a perfect flower; a copy of a document is perfect when it is accurate in every particular; a vase may be called perfect when entire and unblemished, even tho not artistically faultless; the best judges never pronounce a work of art perfect, because they see always ideal possibilities not yet attained; even the ideal is not perfect, by reason of the imperfection of the human mind; a human character faultlessly holy would be morally perfect tho finite. That which is absolute is free from admixture (as absolute alcohol) and in the highest and fullest sense free from imperfection or limitation; as, absolute holiness and love are attributes of God alone. In philosophical language, absolute signifies free from all necessary, or even from all possible, relations, not dependent or limited, unrelated and unconditioned; truth immediately known, as intuitive truth, is absolute; God, as self-existent and free from all limitation or dependence, is called the absolute Being, or simply the Absolute. See CORRECT; IMPLICIT; INNOCENT; PURE; RADICAL; RIPE. — ANT.: bad, blemished, corrupt, corrupted, defaced, defective, deficient, deformed, fallible, faulty, imperfect, incomplete, inferior, insufficient, marred, meager, perverted, poor, ruined, scant, short, spoiled, worthless.

tinuing in the same state or without essential change; durable. [F., < L. per, through, + maneo, remain.]

Syn.: abiding, changeless, constant, durable, enduring, fixed, immutable, invariable, lasting, perpetual, persistent, stable, stedfast, unchangeable, unchanging. Durable (Latin durus, hard) is said almost wholly of material substances that resist wear; lasting is said of either material or immaterial things. Permanent is a word of wider meaning; a thing is permanent which is not liable to change; as, a permanent color. Buildings upon a farm are called permanent improvements. Enduring is a higher word, applied to that which resists both time and change; as, enduring fame. See PERPETUAL.—Ant.: see synonyms for TRANSIENT.

—per'ma-nence, n. The state of being permanent; durability; fixity.—per'ma-nen-cy, n. [-CIES^{z}, pl.] 1. Permanence. 2. Something permanent.—per'ma-nent-ly, adv.

per-mis'sion, 1 pər-mish'ən; 2 per-mish'on, n. The act of permitting or allowing; license granted.

Syn.: allowance, authority, authorization, consent, leave, liberty, license, permit. Authority is rightful power conferred and limited by law; in a more general sense, authority is applied to any conceded power of control; age, wisdom, and character give authority to their possessor; a book of learned research has authority, and is even called an authority. Permission justifies another in acting without interference or censure, and usually implies some degree of approval. There may be a failure to object, which constitutes an implied permission, tho this is more properly expressed by allowance; we allow what we do not oppose, permit what we expressly authorize. The noun permit implies a formal written permission. License is a formal permission granted by competent authority to an individual to do some act or pursue some business which is made unlawful without such permission; as, a license to preach, to solemnize marriages, or to sell intoxicating liquors. A license is permission granted rather than authority conferred; the sheriff has authority (not permission nor license) to make an arrest. Consent is permission by the concurrence of wills in two or more persons, a mutual approval or acceptance of something proposed. Compare synonyms for ALLOW.—Ant.: denial, hindrance, objection, opposition, prevention, prohibition, refusal, resistance.—per-mis"si-bil'i-ty, n. per-mis'si-bl(e-ness†‡.—per-mis'si-bl(e^{r}, per-mis'siv(e^{s}, a. 1. That permits. 2. That is permitted. -ly, adv.—per-mis'so-ry, a. 1. Pertaining to or of the nature of permission. 2. Law. (1) Arising from or founded on permission. per-plex'^{t}, 1 pər-pleks'; 2 per-plĕks'. vt. 1. To subject to doubt or difficulty in determining; embarrass; puzzle. 2. To make confusing. [< L. per, through, + plexus, pp. of plecto, plait.]

Syn.: bewilder, bother, complicate, confound, confuse, distract, embarrass, entangle, harass, involve, mystify, pose, puzzle, trouble.—Ant.: clear up, disentangle, elucidate, explain, make plain, simplify. — per-plexed', pa. 1. Confused; embarrassed. 2. Of a complicated character.

per-plex'i-ty, 1 pər-pleks'i-ti; 2 per-plĕks'i-ty, n. [-TIES^{z}, pl.] 1. Mental difficulty owing to doubt, confusion, etc.; also, that which perplexes. 2. Entanglement.

Syn.: amazement, astonishment, bewilderment, confusion, distraction, disturbance, doubt, embarrassment. Perplexity (L. per, through, and plecto, plait) is the drawing of the thoughts or faculties by turns in different directions or toward contrasted or contradictory conclusions; confusion (L. confusus, from confundo, pour together) is a state in which the mental faculties are, as it were, thrown into chaos, so that the clear and distinct action of the different powers, as of perception, memory, reason, and will, is lost; bewilderment is akin to confusion, but is less overwhelming, and more readily recovered from. Perplexity has not the unsettling of the faculties implied in confusion, nor the overwhelming of the faculties implied in amazement or astonishment; it is not the magnitude of the things to be known, but the want of full and definite knowledge, that causes perplexity. The dividing of a woodland path may cause the traveler the greatest perplexity, which may become bewilderment when he has tried one path after another and lost his bearings completely. With an excitable person, bewilderment may deepen into confusion that will make him unable to think clearly or even to see or hear distinctly. Amazement results from the sudden and unimagined occurrence of great good or evil or the sudden awakening of the mind to unthought-of truth. Astonishment often produces bewilderment, which the word was formerly understood to imply. See AMAZEMENT; ANXIETY; CARE; DOUBT.

per'qui-site, } 1 pûr'kwi-zit; 2 pĕr'kwi-şit, n. Any profit

Syn.: allure, bring over, coax, convince, dispose, entice, impel, incite, incline, induce, influence, lead, move, prevail on or upon, urge, win over. Of these words convince alone has no direct reference to moving the will, denoting an effect upon the understanding only; one may be convinced of his duty without doing it, or he may be convinced of truth that has no manifest connection with duty or action, as of a mathematical proposition. To persuade is to bring the will of another to a desired decision by some influence exerted upon it short of compulsion; one may be convinced that the earth is round; he may be persuaded to travel around it; but persuasion is so largely dependent upon conviction that it is commonly held to be the orator's work first to convince in order that he may persuade. Coax is a slighter word than persuade, seeking the same end by shallower methods, largely by appeal to personal feeling, with or without success; as, a child coaxes a parent to buy him a toy. One may be brought over, induced, or prevailed upon by means not properly included in persuasion, as by bribery or intimidation; he is won over chiefly by personal influence. See ACTUATE; BEND; CONVINCE; INFLUENCE.—Ant.: deter, discourage, dissuade, hinder, hold back, repel, restrain.—per-suad'er, n.—per-sua"si-bil'i-ty, n. per-sua'si-bl(e-ness†.—per-sua'si-bl(e, a. Open to persuasion. per-suad'a-bl(e†.—per-sua'sion, n. 1. The act of persuading or of using persuasive methods. 2. The state of being persuaded; settled opinion. 3. A settled belief; accepted creed; hence, a party, sect, or denomination. 4. Persuasiveness. 5. Rhet. The department of invention in which the object is to move the will, in order to lead to a new course. 6. [Slang.] Sort; kind; as, the male persuasion. phon., phonet., abbr. Phonetics. [phōnē, sound.]

phone[1], 1 fōn; 2 fōn, n. An articulate sound; a tone. [< Gr.

phone[2], n. [Colloq.] Telephone: an abbreviation.

pho-net'ic, } 1 fo-net'ik; 2 fo-nĕt'ic, a. 1. Relating to fo-net'ic[F], } articulate sound. 2. Directly representing articulate sound; as, phonetic spelling. [< Gr. phōnētikos, < phōnē, sound.] — pho-net'i-cal, pho-net'i-cal-ly, adv.—pho-net'i-cist, n. One who advocates or employs phonetic spelling. pho"ne-ti'cian‡; pho'net-ist‡.—pho-net'ics, n. The science of articulate sound. pho'nics‡; pho-nol'o-gy‡.

phon'ic, } 1 fen'ik or fō'nik; 2 fŏn'ic or fō'nic, a. Perfon'ic[F], } taining to or of the nature of sound. [< Gr. phōnē, sound.] [a combining form.

pho'no-, 1 fō'no-; 2 fō'no-. From Greek phōnē, voice, sound:

phonog., abbr. Phonography.

pho'no-graph, } 1 fō'no-graf; 2 fō'no-grăf. I.[t.] vt. To fo'no-graf[S] } record or transmit by means of the phonograph, as a message. II. n. 1. An apparatus for recording sounds and reproducing them when desired, by means of a thin diaphragm, set in vibration by the voice or other sound, and bearing a stylus which records the vibrations on a rotating and advancing cylinder, upon which is cut a faint wavy line, sufficient to guide the style over the same course again, so as to reproduce original sounds. 2. A phonogram: now disused. [< Gr. phōnē, sound, + graphō, write.]—pho'no-gram, n. 1. The tracing produced by a phonograph, from which articulate sounds are reproduced; a phonographic message. 2. A graphic character symbolizing an articulate sound.

fo-nog'ra-fy[S], } The art of writing by sound; a style of shorthand. 2. The art of representing articulate sounds by marks or letters. 3. The art of making or using phonographs; the mechanical recording and reproduction of sound or speech.—pho-nog'ra-pher, n. One skilled in phonography; a phonetic stenographer. pho-nog'ra-phist‡.—pho"no-graph'ic, a. 1. Pertaining to a phonograph. 2. Pertaining to phonography. 3. Pertaining to the representation of articulate sound. pho″no-graph′i-cal‡.—pho″no-graph′i-cal-ly, adv.

pho-nol′o-ger, n. One versed in phonology. pho-nol′o-gist‡.—pho″no-log′ic, a. Of or pertaining to phonology. pho″no-log′i-cal‡.—pho″no-log′i-cal-ly, adv.—pho-nol′o-gy, n. The science of human vocal sounds, their relations one to another, and their interchanges; also, the branch that treats of the sounds of a particular language.—pho′no-type, n. Print. 1. A writing or printing alphabet having a distinct character for each simple sound of speech. 2. A production written or printed in such characters.—pho″no-typ′ic, a. Of or belonging to phonotypy or a phonotype. pho″no-typ′i-cal‡.—pho″no-typ′i-cal-ly, adv.—pho′no-typ″ist, n. One who advocates or uses phonotypy.—pho′no-ty″py, n. The art or practise of phonetic writing or printing; a system of phonetic printing.

-phore, -phoric, suffix. From Greek phoros, bearing; as in sema*phore.*

-phorous, suffix. From Greek phoros, bearing, < pherō, bear: used to form adjectives and indicating producing or bearing; as electro*phorous,* pyro*phorous.*

phos′phate, } 1 fŏs′fēt; 2 fŏs′fāt, n. 1. A salt of phosfos′fate[F], } phoric acid. 2. A fertilizer rich in phosphoric acid.—phos-phat′ic, a. Relating to the phosphates; containing some phosphate. phos′phat-ed‡.

phos′phid, } 1 fŏs′fid, -fid or -fəid; 2 fŏs′fid, -fid or -fid, n.
phos′phide, } Chem. A compound of phosphorus with one or more positive elements. Formerly called phosphuret.

phos′phite, 1 fŏs′fait; 2 fŏs′fit, n. A salt of phosphorous acid.

Phos′phor, 1 fŏs′fər or -fər; 2 fŏs′for, n. 1. The morning star, especially Venus, as the harbinger of day. 2. [p-] Phosphorus. [< Gr. Phōsphoros, < phōsphoros; see PHOSPHORUS.]

phos′phor-us, } 1 fŏs′fər-ŭs; 2 fŏs′for-ŭs, n. A soft fos′for-us[a], } yellowish element that readily absorbs oxygen, exhibiting a phosphorescent glow at a low temperature, and inflaming violently when heated very slightly, as by friction. See ELEMENT. [< Gr. phōsphoros, < phōs, light, + pherō, bear.]—phos′phor-ate, vt. [-AT″ED; -AT″ING.] To combine or impregnate with phosphorus.—phos′phor-esce‡, vi. To exhibit phosphorescence.—phos″phor-es′cence, n. The emission of light without sensible heat, or the light so emitted; specifically, the property of continuing to shine in the dark after exposure to light, shown by many mineral substances; also, the property of producing a faint light, shown by infusorians (causing phosphorescence of the sea), fireflies, etc.—phos″phor-es′cent, a.—phos-phor′ic, a. 1. Pertaining to or derived from phosphorus, especially in its highest valence. 2. Phosphorescent. phos-phor′i-cal‡.—phos′-phor-ous, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or derived from phosphorus, especially in its lower valence, as phosphorous acid.

phos′phu-ret, 1 fŏs′fiu-ret; 2 fŏs′fū-rĕt, n. Chem. Same as PHOSPHID.

phos′phu-ret″ed, 1 fŏs′fiu-ret″ed; 2 fŏs′fū-rĕt″ĕd, a. Combined with phosphorus. phos′phu-ret″ed‡.

phot., photog., abbr. Photographic, photography.

pho′tic, 1 fō′tik; 2 fō′tic, a. Relating to light and its production. [< Gr. phō(t-)s, light, < phaō, shine.]

Pho′ti-us, 1 fō′shi-ŭs; 2 fō′shi-ŭs, n. (816?–897 or 898.) A patriarch of Constantinople who refused to recognize Papal jurisdiction; hence arose the separation of the Greek and Latin churches consummated in 1054.

pho′to, 1 fō′to; 2 fō′to, n. [Colloq.] A photograph.

From Greek phōs (phōt), light, < phaō, shine: a combining form.—pho″to-chem′i-cal, a. Pertaining to or produced by the chemical action of light.—pho″to-chro-mog′ra-phy, n. The art of reproducing on a printing-press photographic images in several colors.—pho″to-chron′o-graph, n. 1. An instrument for taking pictures by photochronography, or a picture so taken. 2. A chronograph adapted for use in photographing a moving body, as a star in transit.—pho″to-chro-nog′ra-phy, n. The process of taking photographic pictures, as of animals in motion, at regular intervals of time.—pho″to-e-lec′tric, a. Pertaining to (1) the combined action of light and electricity, (2) photography by electric light, or (3) photoelectricity. pho″to-e-lec′tri-cal‡.—pho″to-e-lec-tric′i-ty, n. Electricity as produced or affected by light.—pho″to-en-grav′ing, n. The act or process of producing by the aid of photography a relief block or plate for printing; photo-relief engraving, or a plate or picture so produced.

pho′to-graph, 1 fō′to-grəf; 2 fō′to-grăf. I. vt. & vi. To take a picture of by photography; practise photography: used also figuratively. II. n. A picture taken by photography. [< PHOTO- + -GRAPH.] Syn.: see PICTURE.—pho-tog′ra-pher, n. One who makes a business of photography.—pho″to-graph′ic, a. 1. Pertaining to or produced by photography. 2. Like a photograph; vividly depicted. pho″to-graph′i-cal‡.

pho-tog′ra-phy, 1 fo-tɔg′rə-fi; 2 fo-tŏg′ra-fy, n. The process of forming and fixing an image of an object or objects by the chemical action of light, usually on a film containing certain salts, as silver nitrate, sensitive to light, and spread on a plate of metal or glass or on paper or celluloid; also, the art or business of producing and printing photographs.

pho″to-gra-vure′, n. The process of producing an intaglio plate for printing in which there are no sharp incised lines, but minute depressions, the deep parts producing the shadows, and the high parts showing white, or a picture produced from such a plate. [< PHOTO- + F. gravure, engraving.]—pho″to-lith′o-graph, n. A picture produced by photolithography. — pho″to-lith″o-graph′ic, a. — pho″to-li-thog′ra-phy, n. The art or operation of producing on stone, largely by photographic means, a printing-surface from which impressions may be taken by a lithographic process.—pho″-to-me-chan′i-cal, a. Pertaining to a process, illustration, plate, etc., produced by any one of a variety of methods, by which photography is brought to the aid of the etcher or engraver.—pho-tom′e-ter, n. 1. Any instrument for measuring the intensity of light or comparing the intensity of two lights. 2. A device for determining the proper duration of exposure in photography.—pho″to-met′ric, a.—pho-tom′e-try, n.—pho′to-phone, n. Any instrument using a beam of light in the transmission of sound, especially a device for transmitting speech by the use of light reflected from a vibrating diaphragm, as of selenium. [+ Gr. phōnē, voice.]—pho′to-play″, n. 1. The representation of a play in motion-pictures. 2. A play constructed for a motion-picture performance.—pho′to-print″, n. A print by a photomechanical process.—pho′to-proc″ess, n. A photomechanical process.—pho″to-re-lief′. I. a. Of or pertaining to a cut, illustration, etc., produced by a photomechanical process, and having the design in relief. II. n. A cut or picture so produced.—pho′to-sphere, n. The visible shining surface of the sun, or, more rarely, of a fixed star.—pho″to-spher′ic, a.—pho″to-syn′the-sis, n. In plant-life, the process by which carbohydrates are manufactured from carbon dioxid and water through the agency of the chlorophyl cells and light.—pho″to-te-leg′ra-phy, n. Electric reproduction of pictures, writing, etc., at a distance.—pho′to-type, n. A relief plate made for printing by photoengraving.—pho″to-ty-pog′ra-phy, n. Any photomechanical process of engraving in relief that may be reproduced in connection with type on a printing-press.

phrase, } 1 frēz; 2 frāz. I. vt. [PHRASED; PHRAS′ING.] To fraseF, } express in words or in peculiar words; term; style. II. n. 1. An expression, consisting usually of but a few words, denoting a single idea or forming a separate part of a sentence; specif. (Gram.), a group of two or more associated words, not containing a subject and predicate: distinguished from clause. 2. A concise, sententious expression. 3. Characteristic mode of expression; phraseology. 4. Any term or characterization, in one word or several. 5. Mus. A fragment of a melody having well-determined motion and repose, but not complete sense. [< Gr. phrasis, speech.]

Syn.: clause. A clause is a short sentence forming a distinct part of a composition, or in more extended use a distinct and separable statement forming part of a legal or state document, as of a will, an indictment, etc.; a phrase is a group of words conveying a single idea, and forming a distinct part of a sentence. In grammar, a clause is a simple sentence which is combined with some other sentence or sentences, so as to form a complex or compound sentence. A simple sentence standing alone is not, in grammatical use, called a clause, but every clause of a complex or compound sentence is a simple sentence. Thus, the clause always contains a subject and predicate. A phrase does not contain a subject and predicate, tho it may include as many words as a clause. Thus, in the sentence, "He saw the danger, and sought to escape," the words "He saw the danger" constitute a clause, having subject and predicate; but in the sentence, "Seeing the danger, he sought to escape," the words "Seeing the danger" do not form a clause but a phrase, because lacking subject and predicate. See DICTION; TERM.—phra″se-ol′o-gy, n. The choice and arrangement of words and phrases in expressing ideas; diction; style. Syn.: see DICTION.—phra″se-o-log′i-cal, a. phra″se-o-log′ic‡.

phys'ic, } 1 fiz'ik; 2 fỹs'ic. I[t]. vt. 1. To give medicine to; fys'ic[F], } purge. 2†. To cure or heal. II. n. 1. Medicine, or the science of medicine. 2. A cathartic. [< Gr. physikē, < physis, nature.]—phys'i-cal, a. 1. Relating to the material universe or to the physical sciences as physical geography, the branch of geography that treats of the physical features of the earth. 2. Pertaining to the bodily life of man; corporeal. 3. Pertaining to the phenomena of matter or the external world, hence, obvious to the senses; external. 4†. Resembling physic or medicine. 5†. Medicinal; curative. 6†. Purgative.

Syn.: bodily, corporal, corporeal, material, natural, sensible, tangible, visible. Whatever is composed of or pertains to matter may be termed material; physical (Gr. physis, nature) applies to material things considered as parts of a system or organic whole; hence, we speak of material substances, physical forces, physical laws. Bodily, corporal, and corporeal apply primarily to the human body; bodily and corporal both denote pertaining or relating to the body; corporeal signifies of the nature of or like the body; corporal is now almost wholly restricted to signify applied to or inflicted upon the body; we speak of bodily sufferings, bodily presence, corporal punishment, the corporeal frame. See NATURAL.—Ant.: hyperphysical, immaterial, intangible, intellectual, invisible, mental, moral, spiritual, unreal, unsubstantial. —physical sciences, the sciences that treat of dead matter, or of energy apart from vitality, including astronomy, mechanics, physics, chemistry, and the physical portions of geography, geology, meteorology, and mineralogy.

—phys'i-cal-ly, adv.—phy-si'cian, n. One versed in medicine; a doctor.—phys'i-cist, n. A student of or specialist in physics.—phys'ics, n. The science that treats of the phenomena associated with matter in general, especially its relations to energy, and of the laws governing these phenomena, excluding the special laws and phenomena peculiar to living matter (biology), or to special kinds of matter (chemistry).—phys'ick-y, a. Resembling physic.

fys"i-og'no-my[F], } [-MIES[z], pl.] 1. The face or features as revealing character or disposition. 2. The outward look of a thing. 3. The art of reading character by the lineaments of the face or form of the body. [< Gr. physis, nature, + gnōmōn, judge.]—phys"i-og-nom'ic or -i-cal, a. Pertaining to the face or to physiognomy.—phys"i-og-nom'ics, n. Same as PHYSIOGNOMY, 3.—phys"i-og'no-mist, n. An expert in physiognomy. phys"i-og'no-mer†.

phys"i-og'ra-phy, 1 fiz"ı-og'rə-fı; 2 fỹs"i-ŏg'ra-fy, n. Description of nature. (1) Physiographic geology: a term of variable and uncertain use. (2) Physical geography. (3) That part of a natural science dealing in description rather than explanation or theory. [PHYSIO- + -GRAPHY.]—phys"i-og'ra-pher, n. One versed in physiography.—phys"i-o-graph'ic, a. Pertaining to physiography. phys"i-o-graph'i-cal†.—phys"i-o-graph'i-cal-ly, adv.

phys"i-ol'o-gy, } 1 fiz"ı-ol'o-jı; 2 fỹs"i-ŏl'o-ġy, n. 1. The fys"i-ol'o-gy[F], } branch of biology that treats of the vital phenomena manifested by animals or plants. 2. A treatise on this science. 3. Formerly, biology. [< Gr.[L] physis, nature; and see -OLOGY.]—phys"i-o-log'i-cal, a. Pertaining to the functions of living organisms.—phys"i-o-log'ic†.—phys"i-ol'o-gist, n. One versed in physiology.

phy-sique', 1 fı-zık'; 2 fy-sīk', n. The physical structure or organization of a person. [F.]

phy'to-, phyt-, 1 faı'to-, faıt-; 2 fỹ'to-, fỹt-. pit'i-ful, 1 pit'ı-ful; 2 pit'i-fụl, a. 1. Calling forth pity or compassion. 2. Exciting pity mingled with contempt.

Syn.: abject, base, contemptible, despicable, lamentable, miserable, mournful, moving, paltry, pathetic, piteous, pitiable, sorrowful, touching, woful, wretched. Pitiful originally signified full of pity; as, "the Lord is very pitiful and of tender mercy," James v, 11; but this usage is now archaic, and the meaning in question is appropriated by such words as merciful and compassionate. Pitiful and pitiable now refer to what may be deserving of pity, pitiful being used chiefly for that which is merely an object of thought, pitiable for that which is brought directly before the senses; as, a pitiful story; a pitiable object; a pitiable condition. Since pity, however, always implies weakness or inferiority in that which is pitied, pitiful and pitiable are often used by an easy transition, for what might awaken pity, but does awaken contempt; as, a pitiful excuse; he presented a pitiable appearance. Piteous is now rarely used in its earlier sense of feeling pity, but in its derived sense applies to what really excites the emotion; as, a piteous cry. See MERCIFUL. Compare HUMANE; MERCY; PITY.—Ant.: august, beneficent, commanding, dignified, exalted, glorious, grand, great, helpful, lofty, mighty, noble, sublime, superb. —pit'i-ful-ly, adv.—pit'i-ful-ness, n.

pit'y, n. [PIT'IES2, pl.] 1. The feeling of grief or pain awakened by misfortunes or sorrows of others. 2. That which arouses compassion; misfortune. [< OF. pitie, < L. pietas; see PIETY.]

Syn.: commiseration, compassion, condolence, mercy, sympathy, tenderness. Pity is a feeling of grief or pain aroused by the weakness, misfortunes, or distresses of others, joined with a desire to help or relieve. Sympathy (feeling or suffering with) implies some degree of equality, kindred, or union; pity is for what is weak or unfortunate, and so far, at least, inferior to ourselves; hence, pity is often resented where sympathy would be welcomed. We have sympathy with one in joy or grief, in pleasure or pain, pity only for those in suffering or need: we may have sympathy with the struggles of a giant or the triumphs of a conqueror; we are moved with pity for the captive or the slave. Pity may be only in the mind, but mercy does something for those who are its objects. Compassion, like pity, is exercised only with respect to the suffering or unfortunate, but combines with the tenderness of pity the dignity of sympathy and the active quality of mercy. Commiseration is as tender as compassion, but more remote and hopeless; we have commiseration for sufferers whom we can not reach or can not relieve. Condolence is the expression of sympathy. See MERCY.—Ant.: barbarity, brutality, cruelty, ferocity, hard-heartedness, harshness, inhumanity, mercilessness, pitilessness, rigor, ruthlessness, severity, sternness, truculence.—Prep.: pity on or upon that which we help or spare; pity for that which we merely contemplate; "have pity upon me, O ye my friends," Job xix, 21; "pity for a horse o'erdriven," TENNYSON In Memoriam lxiii, st. 1.—pit'i-less, a. 1. Destitute of pity; cruel. 2. Exciting no pity. Syn.: see IMPLACABLE.—pit'i-less-ly, adv.—pit'i-less-ness, n.

(2) To draw up formal allegations. (3) To file a pleading.

Syn.: advocate, argue, ask, beg, beseech, entreat, implore, press, solicit, urge. To plead for one is to employ argument or persuasion, or both, in his behalf, usually with earnestness or importunity; similarly one may be said to plead for himself or for a cause, etc., or with direct object, to plead a case; in legal usage, pleading is argumentative; in popular usage, pleading always implies some appeal to the feelings. One argues a case solely on rational grounds and supposably with fair consideration of both sides; he advocates one side for the purpose of carrying it, and under the influence of motives that may range all the way from cold self-interest to the highest and noblest impulses; he pleads a cause, or pleads for a person, with still more intense feeling. Beseech, entreat, and implore imply impassioned earnestness, with direct and tender appeal to personal considerations. Press and urge imply more determined or perhaps authoritative insistence. Solicit is a weak word denoting merely an attempt to secure one's consent or cooperation, sometimes by sordid or corrupt motives. See ALLEGE.—Prep.: plead with the tyrant for the captive; plead against the oppressor; plead to the indictment; at the bar; before the court; in court.

pleas'ant, } 1 plez'ȧnt; 2 plēz'ȧnt, a. 1. Giving or pro-ples'ant[5], } moting pleasure. 2. Conducive to merriment; gay. [< F. plaisant, < L. placen(t-)s, ppr. of placeo, please.]

Syn.: agreeable, attractive, good-natured, kind, kindly, obliging, pleasing, pleasurable. That is pleasing from which pleasure is received, or may readily be received, without reference to any action or intent in that which confers it; as, a pleasing picture; a pleasing landscape. Whatever has active qualities adapted to give pleasure is pleasant; as, a pleasant breeze; a pleasant (not a pleasing) day. As applied to persons, pleasant always refers to a disposition ready and desirous to please; one is pleasant, or in a pleasant mood, when inclined to make happy those with whom he is dealing, to show kindness and do any reasonable favor. In this sense pleasant is near akin to kind, but kind refers to act or intent, while pleasant stops with the disposition; many persons are no longer in a pleasant mood if asked to do a troublesome kindness. Pleasant keeps always something of the sense of actually giving pleasure, and thus surpasses the meaning of good-natured; there are good-natured people who by reason of rudeness and ill breeding are not pleasant companions. A pleasing face has good features, complexion, expression, etc.; a pleasant face indicates a kind heart and an obliging disposition, as well as kindly feelings in actual exercise; we can say of one usually good-natured, "on that occasion he did not meet me with a pleasant face." Pleasant in the sense of gay, merry, jocose (the sense still retained in pleasantry) is now rare, and would not be understood outside of literary circles. See AGREEABLE; AMIABLE; ATTRACTIVE; COMFORTABLE; DELIGHTFUL; GOOD; VIVACIOUS. —Ant.: arrogant, austere, crabbed, disagreeable, displeasing, dreary, forbidding, gloomy, glum, grim, harsh, hateful, ill-humored, ill-natured, offensive, repellent, repulsive, unkind, unpleasant.—Prep.: to, with, or toward persons; about a matter.

Syn.: abounding, abundant, adequate, affluent, ample, bounteous, bountiful, complete, copious, enough, exuberant, full, generous, large, lavish, liberal, luxuriant, overflowing, plenteous, profuse, replete, rich, sufficient, teeming. Plentiful is used of supplies, as of food, water, etc.; as, "a plentiful rain," Ps. lxviii, 9. We may also say a copious rain; but copious can be applied to thought, language, etc., where plentiful can not well be used. Affluent and liberal both apply to riches, resources; liberal, with especial reference to giving or expending. Affluent, referring especially to riches, may be used of thought, feeling, etc. Neither affluent, copious, nor plentiful can be used of time or space; a field is sometimes called plentiful, not with reference to its extent, but to its productiveness. Complete expresses not excess or overplus, and yet not mere sufficiency, but harmony, proportion, fitness to a design, or ideal. Ample and abundant may be applied to any subject. Lavish and profuse imply a decided excess, oftenest in the ill sense. We rejoice in abundant resources, and honor generous hospitality; lavish or profuse expenditure suggests extravagance and wastefulness. Luxuriant is used especially of that which is abundant in growth; as, a luxuriant crop. Compare ADEQUATE; AMPLE; ENOUGH.—Ant.: deficient, drained, exhausted, impoverished, inadequate, insufficient, mean, miserly, narrow, niggardly, poor, scant, scanty, scarce, scrimped, short, small, sparing, stingy, straitened.

Syn.: meter, metrical composition, numbers, poem, poesy, rime, song, verse. In ordinary usage, poetry is both imaginative and metrical. There may be poetry without rime, but hardly without meter, or what in some languages takes its place, as the Hebrew parallelism; but poetry involves, besides the artistic form, the exercise of the fancy or imagination in a way always beautiful, often lofty or even sublime. Failing this, there may be verse, rime, and meter, but not poetry. In a very wide sense poetry may be anything that pleasingly addresses the imagination; as, the poetry of motion. There is much in literature that is beautiful and sublime in thought and artistic in construction, which is yet not poetry, in the strict sense, because quite devoid of the element of song, whereby poetry differs from the most lofty, beautiful, or impassioned prose. Compare METER; SONG. —Ant.: prosaic speech, prosaic writing, prose.

po-lite', 1 po-laɪt'; 2 po-līt', a. 1. Exhibiting in manner or speech a considerate regard for others. 2. Finished and elegant in style. [< L. politus, pp. of polio, polish.]

Syn.: accomplished, civil, complaisant, courteous, courtly, cultivated, cultured, elegant, genteel, gracious, obliging, polished, urbane, well-behaved, well-bred, well-mannered. A civil person observes such propriety of speech and manner as to avoid being rude; one who is polite (literally polished) observes more than the necessary proprieties, conforming to all that is graceful, becoming, and thoughtful in the intercourse of refined society. A man may be civil with no consideration for others, simply because self-respect forbids him to be rude; but one who is polite has at least some care for the opinions of others, and if polite in the highest and truest sense, which is coming to be the prevailing one, he cares for the comfort and happiness of others in the smallest matters. Civil is a colder and more distant word than polite; courteous is fuller and richer, dealing often with greater matters, and is used only in the good sense. Courtly suggests that which befits a royal court, and is used of external grace and stateliness without reference to the prompting feeling; as, the courtly manners of the ambassador. Genteel refers to an external elegance, which may be showy and superficial, and the word is thus inferior to polite or courteous. Urbane refers to a politeness that is genial and successful in giving others a sense of ease and cheer. Polished refers to external elegancies of speech and manner without reference to spirit or purpose; as, a polished gentleman or a polished scoundrel; cultured refers to a real and high development of mind and soul, of which the external manifestation is the smallest part. Complaisant denotes a disposition to please or favor beyond what politeness would require.— Ant.: awkward, bluff, blunt, boorish, brusk, clownish, coarse, discourteous, ill-behaved, ill-bred, ill-mannered, impertinent, impolite, impudent, insolent, insulting, raw, rude, rustic, uncivil, uncouth, unpolished, untaught, untutored.—po-lite'ly, adv.

po-lite'ness, 1 po-laɪt'nes; 2 po-līt'nĕs, n. 1. The quality of being polite; courtesy or complaisance of speech. 2‡. Finish and elegance, polish.

Syn.: affability, amenity, civility, comity, complaisance, courteousness, courtesy, courtliness, decorum, elegance, gentility, polish, refinement, suavity, urbanity. See ADDRESS. pol'i-ty, 1 pel'ɪ-tɪ; 2 pŏl'i-ty, n. [-TIES[z], pl.] 1. The form or method of government of a nation, state, church, etc. 2. Any community living under some definite form of government. 3†. Policy. [< F. politie, < Gr.[L] politeia, polity.]

Syn.: policy. Polity is the permanent system of government of a state, a church, or a society; policy is the method of management with reference to the attainment of certain ends: the national polity of the United States is republican; each administration has a policy of its own. Policy is often used as equivalent to expediency; as, many think honesty to be good policy. Polity in ecclesiastical use serves a valuable purpose in distinguishing that which relates to administration and government from that which relates to faith and doctrine; two churches identical in faith may differ in polity, or those agreeing in polity may differ in faith. See LEGISLATION.

Syn.: adjourn, defer, delay, hold in abeyance, lay by, lay aside, procrastinate, put by, put off. Adjourn (L. ad, to, + diurnus, daily, from dies, day) signifies literally to put off to another day, and, hence, to any future time. A deliberative assembly may adjourn to another day or to another hour of the same day, and resume business where it left off, as if there had been no interval. To adjourn "without day" (sine die) is etymologically a contradiction in terms, but is in approved use, such adjournment terminating the existence of the body so adjourned. This may be obviated, when no day can be fixed, by adjourning to meet at the call of the president or other officer. In common usage, to adjourn a matter is to hold it in abeyance until it may be more conveniently or suitably attended to; in such use defer and postpone are close synonyms of adjourn; defer (L. dis, apart, + fero, bear) is simply to lay or put aside temporarily; to postpone (L. post, after, + pono, place) is strictly to lay or put aside until "after" something else occurs, or is done, known, obtained, or the like; as, to postpone one's departure until after a friend's arrival; but postpone is often used without such limitation. Adjourn, defer, and postpone all imply definite expectation of later consideration or action; delay is much less definite, while procrastinate is hopelessly vague. One may adjourn, defer, delay, or postpone a matter intelligently and for good reason; he procrastinates through indolence, negligence, or irresolution; one who procrastinates gives no assurance that he will ever act. Compare HINDER; PROCRASTINATE.—Ant.: act, act on, complete, consummate, dispatch, do, expedite, hasten, hurry, quicken, take up, urge forward, urge on.—post-pone′ment, n. Syn.: see RESPITE.—post-pon′er, n.
